J.H.S.

... Life is comprised of three stages, the past, the present and the future. And I have come to determine that the most important epoch of time is the present for it is in today that we create all our yesterdays and mold each new tomorrow. My life has been all yesterdays except for this diminishing moment which is already a part of my past. And yet, I feel nothing but immediacy in my life. How long ago was 365 days if I can remember clearly burning suns and phrases of music hummed, or tears and kisses that felt one as sweet as the other? How can I push behind me haunting years that are a part of me today? As each era of my life comes to a close, I convert all of the moments to memories. And as they become an everlasting part of me, I cast another shadow across the earth.

Time moves faster than thoughts and plans, and once again I find it time for the ritual of putting an era to rest. I wanted this year to be filled with ideas and emotions. It was. And now I want to remember, not what I did or wore; but I want to remember that a lot of old ideas with new possibilities excited me this year. I want to remember that I smiled more than I cried; that I loved more than I hated; that I found more friends than I found enemies; that I was together more than I was alone. But most of all, I think I want to remember that I wanted to remember. I'll always go back to my past and think about how I felt and what I thought. People say that children grow into the real world and leave the fantasy of childhood behind. Well, I can't think of one belief that I've abandoned, or even care to. One day in English class where so many of my memories were made and immortalized, we talked about superstitions and the concept of another realm existing around us. And it reminded me of something I hadn't remembered in a long time. Have you ever wondered where the Garden of Eden is? It's supposedly somewhere here on earth, and I used to think, "Well, why can't it be somewhere close?" Then I'd look at the wooded hills just two blocks in back of my house, and I'd pretend that it was there. Many times, armed only with adventure, I'd set out looking for it, and I found some of the prettiest Edens. Of course, since I don't remember bumping into an angel with a fiery sword, it wasn't the real garden. But I could have been on the outskirts for all the beautiful places I found. And again through yesterday, I discovered another principle of life. If you go looking for something you really believe is there, like goodness, then you'll find it, even in the smallest degree. But you have to look, and you have to believe.

I've learned so much in seventeen years that I feel simultaneously, eternally young and old. So many profound realizations have come to me this year that had I been born in September and died in June I could have truthfully said I lived a full life. I learned of unity. Within the time limit of nine months, I discovered that there is no time.

Lesson one: timelessness and unity, the basic characteristic of the soul and life. As in the novel Siddhartha, only when we become a part of the river do we truly belong. For in the river are the voices and the faces of the past rolling to meet the voices and the faces of the future. We must become as eternal as the waters, always moving on, yet always there. Timeless and unified, together in love, sharing the wonders of life with the decades of the past and the centuries of tomorrow. There is this same unity to be found physically since so many of us cannot grasp but what is material. Within the body there are cells. A group of cells acting together form a tissue, but are still cells. A mass of tissues working toward the same end comprise an organ, but it is still a tissue which is still a cell, and so forth, until the entire human anatomy is formed. Body and mind are one; as timeless and unified as the soul.

I used to have another funny truism about time; if something had an end, it surely must have had a beginning. I don't believe that anymore, or rather I know for certain that it isn't true. We learn by mistakes that we repeat until one day a little wisdom comes to us. That is why all of the truly wise men were once defeated. They know that failure is not in falling but in not getting back up. Certainly I am not all wise, but perhaps a little wiser than I was for I have learned that life can end without ever having really begun. So many times I thought that I was living only to awaken some mid-afternoon to find that I had just been born. Then the awful thought would come to me, "What if I had died instead?" So I try to remember now, as often as I possibly can, that each day is new and that for all life's purposes, I am like the sun; born in the morning, rising to my height, spreading warmth, fighting clouds, and buried in my flowing shroud at dusk.

I must learn to enjoy the simple things of each day. Again reminiscing, I stumble upon an essay I once read which touches my life tenderly right now. The essay, written by Jesse Stuart, is entitled "If I Were Seventeen Again." The idea embodied in this work is that the most important things in life are simple and often found in nature itself. Mr. Stuart sadly reflects on a youth wasted by chasing age. And now I can hear his essay calling to me, warning me to look at the simple things now and appreciate them. Perhaps once a man has done this, all that life has to offer will take on a fuller meaning and have more value in the end. So that the world, or even one person will be glad that he had lived; so that he may never have to say, "If I were ..." again.

Reflecting on a lifetime of happenings, I find myself caught up in the magic that was a piece of yesterday. I can remember vividly the mystical moments when I believed in everything, and perhaps I still do. It's so hard to watch the constellations tease each other with their flickering lights on a clear, sweet-smelling night and not make a special wish on the first star I see. I've done that so many times before, and once I wished for a blue jewelry box when no one else was around. In the middle of the week, months from my birthday or Christmas, I got a jewelry box, and it was blue. And in that little part inside of me that never will grow up, I still can feel the magic of believing. Maybe it was magic that night; maybe it was love. Maybe they're one and the same.

Now the file in my memory stops at September, 1972, and I guess I can't avoid it any longer. Fresher moments are always hardest to relinquish to the past. It is easier taking flowers to an old grave than digging a new one. However there is compensation and comfort when so many memories have become milestones, landmarks in my journey to a full life. When September brought the first day of my senior year, it was with apprehension and excitement that I walked the halls, charting the course my classes would take me, wondering what new people I would meet, what new ideas my mind would seize. My worst fear those first few weeks of school was that once the newness faded, monotony would set in. It never happened, and I've given up worrying about it. I wanted each minute to bring something new, and I suppose that was as much a curse as it was a blessing. For with every minute filled, the hours went rushing by. All I did was blink, and September turned to April; turned my back a moment, and April melted into June. The fast pace of homecoming, senior magazine sale, getting acquainted with new friends, building stronger bonds with old, the excitement of the variety show, a speech contest, a trip to New York, a Christmas concert — all made Halloween and Christmas seem like Thursday and Friday of the same week. And no one can say that Johnstown High doesn't know how to end a year. Thanks to a devoted coach and ten fantastic athletes, we started the Year of the Bull, 1973, with swelled heads, walking ten feet above the ground with an enormous pride in a basketball team that couldn't be defeated; not in its regular season, not in tournament play.

January brought some belated snows of December, but I never really noticed it was winter. The seasons of this year are rather like neutral drops not much affecting the action in the play called "Senior Year." With the snows came mid-terms to remind us of the finals that would not be long in coming. January was special in another way, too. It was the hallowed month when the Men of Troy challenged Altoona in the Jaffa Mosque and defeated them for the second time of the season.

February opened the nail-biting season for those involved in the class play by Thornton Wilder. And sometimes it did seem as if we were pulling through rehearsals by "the skin of our teeth." But March brought the reassurance of three successful shows. February left me a lot to brag about — our wrestling, basketball, and scholastic quiz teams to be exact. And it isn't just the winning teams that have made this year so special, but the winning people that are a part of the class of '73. The senior class that broke last year's records in magazine sales and the blood drive has broken all sorts of records when it comes to being number one, without even mentioning a certain six-five senior forward who got a little carried away. Leaving behind a little disappointment, but a lot of love and pride, March bowed out to make room for April.

Now April is a sly month bound and determined to fool everyone who tries to guess what events lay hidden in the days of her weeks. In the wake of April's first trick, snatching some of February's weather, most of the excitement lay in the hasty preparations for the musical. Spring was anxiously watched for, too. Sooner or later April would have to stop playing games. With the flowers peeping through the damp ground, and the birds singing from every other telephone line, nature had April's king in check, and before I knew what had happened — checkmate. Trees were blooming; the days got warmer and brighter. And, like the sun, it was time for our music department to shine, too. No less than two television concerts were scheduled for April, and the musical's opening night drew nearer with each note that was sung. April reluctantly gave way to May, and I, too, was sorry to see it happen. We were coming to the homestretch already with our diplomas just millimeters out of our reach. Like in a relay race, we would be handed a piece of parchment and be expected to touch minds with another runner leagues into the future. April rose and fell like an all too brief but beautiful day, and I was reminded of a tender thought Nathaniel Hawthorne once passed on to me. He wrote, "I love to watch how the day, tired as it is, lags away reluctantly and hates to be called yesterday so soon."

So soon and May was upon us. There were plans made for another memorable trip to New York. The number one JHS band, orchestra, and chorus proudly displayed their talents in beautiful arrangements of spring at the annual spring concert. But the musical, "Fiddler on the Roof", was our pride and joy quite complementing the month of May. I was rather pleased with the production myself. But when Tevye sings "If I were a rich man . . .," I take exception. No one could ever convince me that this hasn't been an abundantly rich year. The only poorness I have is in my ability to say a decent farewell to such a year, to such achievements, to such friends. But I could see June coming as I looked from the corner of my eye. No matter how I tried to ignore her, June was here to stay, or at least for as long as any month will linger.

The prom and senior week went by quicker than the flash on the camera that preserved for posterity my image in a cap and gown. The millimeters' distance between my diploma and the tips of my fingers soon closed, and I fell victim to a world of shaking hands and flashing teeth, and a vocabulary of "Congratulations" and "best wishes." "Twelve years," I told myself, "is quite an accomplishment." Half-smiling I whispered, "Congratulations." The sophomores and juniors filed out of the building taking countless different paths, anxious for three months of a vacation before they returned to share another year together. As I watched them leave, I stood hesitantly in the doorway, the exit of twelve years of learning, the threshold of all I am destined to do. And I simultaneously asked and answered the question, "Where do I go from here?" "To tomorrow."

But before I reach tomorrow and immediately after leaving yesterday, I come face to face with my constant companion, today. And I don't think I'll ever find a more appropriate time to thank the many actors and technicians of my previous life. To my producers, my mother and father, I could never say enough. To thank them for all their love and guidance and encouragement would be to recognize only a minute fraction of all they've done for me. Perhaps in another time, there will be some way I may show my gratitude and love. Next I must acknowledge the directors, my teachers and all those who acted in that role. It was they who directed me to seek knowledge; they who helped me choose the path I follow. I owe a debt that can never be paid to these directors who so kindly also served as friends. From them I discovered that man cannot be taught, he can only learn through interaction with others. What knowledge I retain did not come from printed books but from the touching of our lives. And lastly, I find an eternal obligation to my fellow actors whom I lovingly call friends. I cannot share a moment without building a common bond. And twelve years of sharing the good and the bad makes it impossible to say good-bye.

This is the year of my re-birth. I look at things now, and they're somehow prettier; the air is somehow sweeter. I feel today slipping away into yesterday. I feel a shedding of time; an emergence into a new era of my life. But I could never forget seventeen full years or the special moments between September and June. And someday when I stumble upon a familiar object, or perhaps when the sun radiates its warmth from the exact same spot in the sky, then I'll remember. And a deluge of past moments will flood my mind, maybe even my eyes. But they will be sweet tears, as sweet as the kiss of friends, of cherished memories, or a life that knows no boundaries, no divisions, but continues to grow, merging past with present, flying exuberantly, head-long into the future.

ADMINISTRATORS

Mr. Svitchan: "The duties of an assistant Principal at J.H.S. might be divided into two general areas. I like to feel that my primary responsibility is to try to accommodate our students so as to help make their stay at J.H.S. as enjoyable as possible. The second area of responsibility involves the enforcement of rules and regulations. This responsibility obviously is not as rewarding or enjoyable as the previously mentioned one, but fortunately it involves a relatively small proportion of our students."

Mr. Rushin addresses the 1973 Graduating Class: "As a former student of J.H.S. now returned as assistant principal, I find the students just as friendly, just as sincere, and just as concerned about a good education as they have been in the past. I also found the staff just as determined to help the students in any way they can. Thank you for making my first year here a most rewarding one."

The four administrators all have a different view of their jobs and of the students. Here are their views.

Mr. Grove: "You, the students of JHS, have provided me with many special opportunities. Through you, I have been able to learn about today's teenagers-how they think, how they feel, and how they act. I have also been able to see the good they are capable of doing.

Because of you, we have been able to initiate improvements in our educational programs and school community. Even more important, I feel I have been able to make some positive contributions to the personal lives of some of you with whom I have been able to work with more closely.

Thank you and good luck to each of you, regardless of where the future finds you."

Mr. Helsel: "There is a great connection between an enthusiastic school and community support and winning teams. Keeping the fans pleased is part of my job."

TECHNICAL

Heading the business department at JHS is Miss Kathryn Long. The business course consists of typing, bookkeeping, secretarial, and clerical training. The courses of business education are extended to students so that they can meet the demands of a more complex business world.

Shorthand is contained in the secretarial course. Shorthand enables students to write as fast as people speak by using a system of symbols.

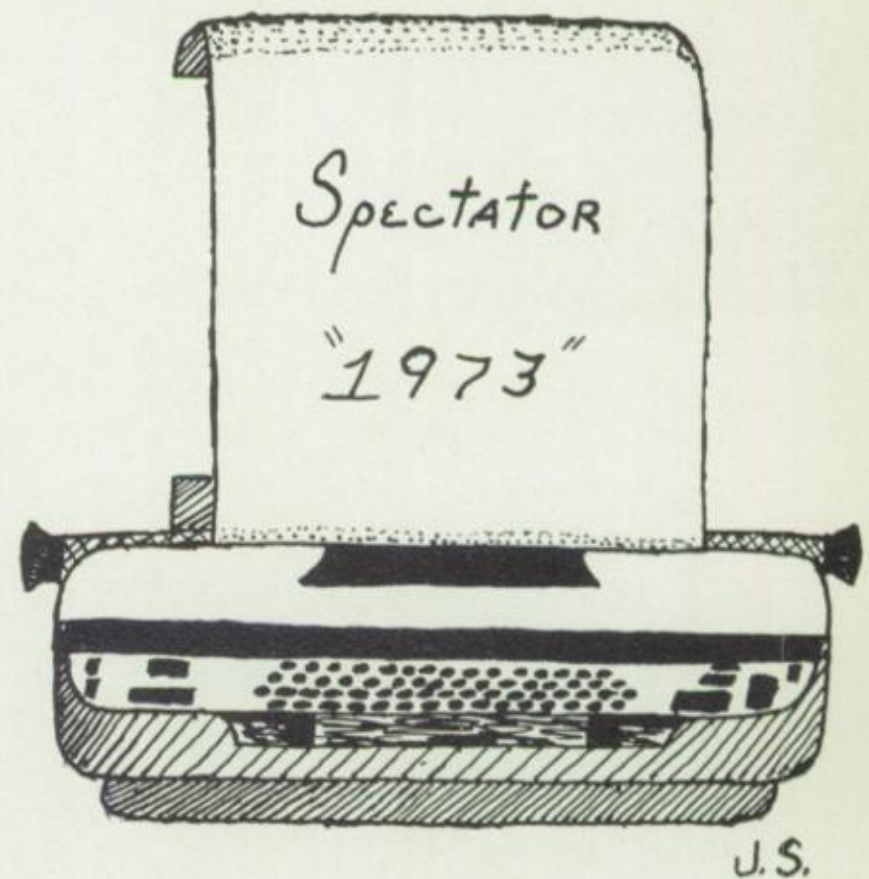

The fundamentals of record keeping, as used in a double entry bookkeeping system, are taught to the bookkeeping students.

The clerical students are trained to file and to use office machines, while the typing students strive to obtain greater and more accurate speed.

By far, one can say that the business department at JHS is successful in preparing qualified employees for the business world.

The Woodshop of J. H. S. combines skill and determination to produce some of the best carpentry around. Orders from area schools are sent to the shop, and projects such as the making of bookcases, bulletin boards, and tables are undertaken by the boys in the class. The boys are also permitted to work on projects of their own or on orders taken from friends or neighbors. These may be worked on during class time. As each boy works on his project, he not only gets a feeling of satisfaction for a job well done, he gets experience as well.

Under the supervision of Mr. Robert Anderson, the boys of the shop are learning a technical skill which can earn them a fine living. Each student is trained in the art of cabinet making. Many communities are in need of skilled workers such as the ones produced in our woodshop.

Here's luck to them and their future!

PHYSICS

If you're a student interested in a career in Science, and you're looking for a school with science to space, you've come to the right place. Here at J.H.S., a student can choose from a variety of sciences. These include: Biology, Chemistry, Advanced Chemistry, Aeronautics, Physiology, and Physics. Heading the science department is Miss Mary Solarczyk.

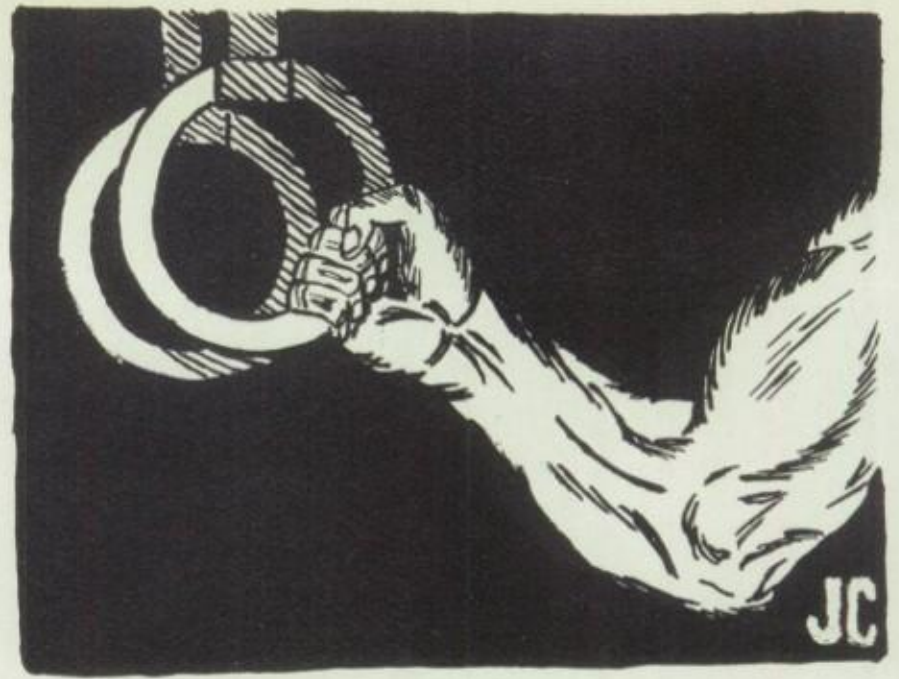

One of the senior's favorite classes is Physics, which is taught by Mr. Ralph Weigle. Mr. Weigle uses some unique formulae—such as:  $\text{McGough} = \frac{\text{Brownie}}{\text{"Cope"}}$ ,  $R = S$  (Rusin = Slouch);  $4.0 = \text{Girls}$ .

So if you're a science-bug, look no further than J.H.S.

PHYSICAL FITNESS

A GAME OF LIFE

The purpose of the gym classes, both boys' and girls', was to keep the students physically fit. A variety of different activities was practiced to keep the students' bodies in top shape. Among these activities were basketball, volleyball, tumbling, and the usual warm-up exercises. The students participated in the activities with vigor and vitality.

The two days a week put into the students' workout was well worth it. The boys were coached by Mr. Michael Garbinski, Mr. James Paul, and Mr. Dennis Popp, while the girls were instructed by Mrs. Lois Huchel, Mrs. Mary Minium, and Miss Cindy Pagano. Gym provided relaxation and gave the body and mind co-ordination.

Homemaking offered a variety of different opportunities. For the first time at JHS this course was open to the boys. Along with learning how to cook, the students learned the importance of a balanced diet. The different customs of other countries, pertaining to food, were also studied.

Anyone who took this course carries with him many memorable experiences. Like the time . . . "When we were making waffles, we had four waffle irons on at a time and blew a fuse. Boy, was it fun cleaning those waffle irons the next day." (Cindy Lonsinger) "When my eyes deceived me, and I thought I had seen something moving in our pizza." (Tom Voytas) "When a part of the garbage disposal went down the garbage disposal." (Darlene Kopach) "When we made brown sugar nut rolls without the brown sugar." (Marie Toth) "When Jeff Cooper's straps of his apron were accidentally sucked up in the sweeper." (Tony Caper) "When a coconut cream pie tasted like something out of the horror movies." (Neil Dadey)

HOMEMAKING, ANYONE'S GAME?

"I remember the time we made icing for a cake, with granulated sugar instead of confectioners sugar." (Phyllis Uncapher) "When I sewed my pockets shut on my apron." (Kevin Korenoski) "The day Mrs. Jones was falling off the ladder and was yelling, 'Linda, help me!'" (Linda Slusser) "When I threw the sifter in the oven, and it almost melted." (Barry Holtzman)

The students seemed to be concerned with the future students of homemaking, for they offered them some friendly words of advice. "Try it, you'll like it." (Michelle Cox) "Make sure your next period is free, so you can go to the nurse." (Dave Pringle) "It's a very good class that is very informative, and I learned a lot." (Debby Lees) "Don't mess with Mrs. Jones (she has secret powers you'll regret)." (Michael Novelli) "Watch out for the pizza." (Greg Fris) "Carry either Alka Seltzer or Bromo Seltzer with you at all times." (Tom Voytas) "Take it! It's worth your time." (Jeff Cooper)

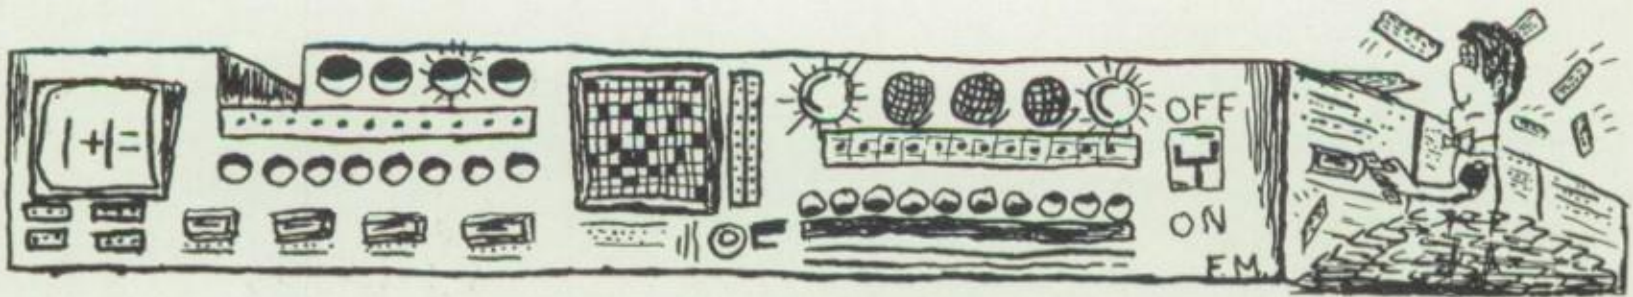

Although there appears to be little or no connection between math and drafting courses at JHS and a crossword puzzle, three very basic requirements are common to both: a quick mind, perserverance, and a desire for accuracy.

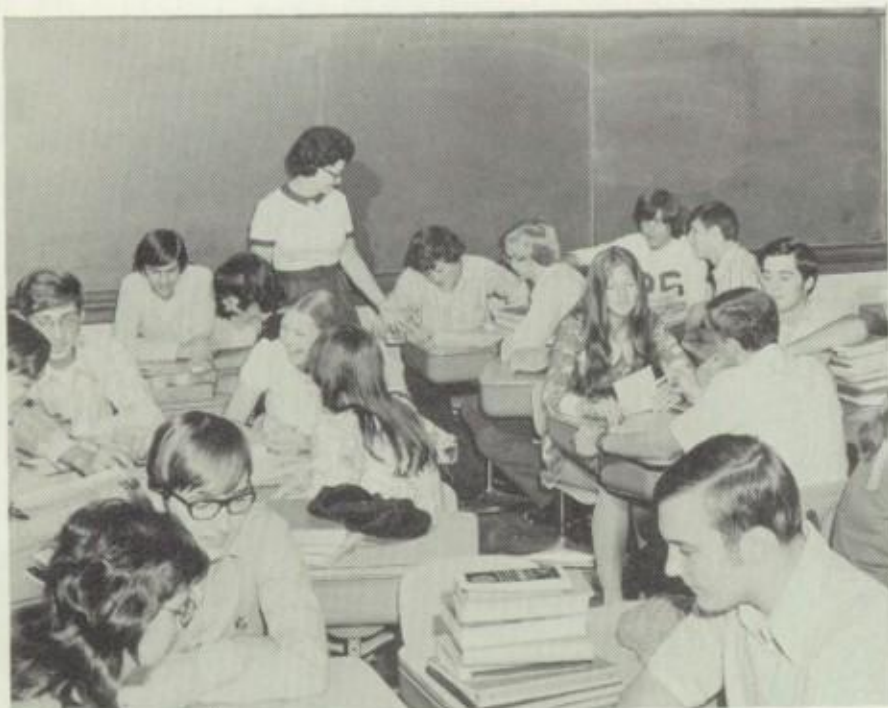

The math department, headed by Mrs. Napolitan, offers a wide variety of courses, including: General Math, Nurses' Math, Geometry, Algebra I & II, Trigonometry-Math Analysis, a Math Analysis II course for seniors, and an accelerated course which allows students to take Calculus in their senior year. As is obvious by the formidable list preceeding, one can be puzzled by anything from practical applications of mathematical concepts to abstract problems of analytical math. Future students at JHS may find something new to be puzzled by — a computer programming course may be introduced. This addition would put the finishing touches on an already well-rounded course selection in math, one that gives JHS students a good background for whatever field they plan to enter.

Drafting at JHS, taught by Mr. Weaver, seeks to prepare through a variable course of study, a student acceptable to a fast-changing professional and industrial market, where there is a great demand for competent draftsmen and engineers. Drafting offers to the student who has a desire to draw, the opportunity to develop his talents through industrial arts or vocational courses. A prerequisite of math and geometry is desired; however, the student receives all necessary geometry and trigonometry for problem solving needs. "Above all, bring a concerted desire to develop your talents and you'll not be disappointed." (Mr. Weaver)

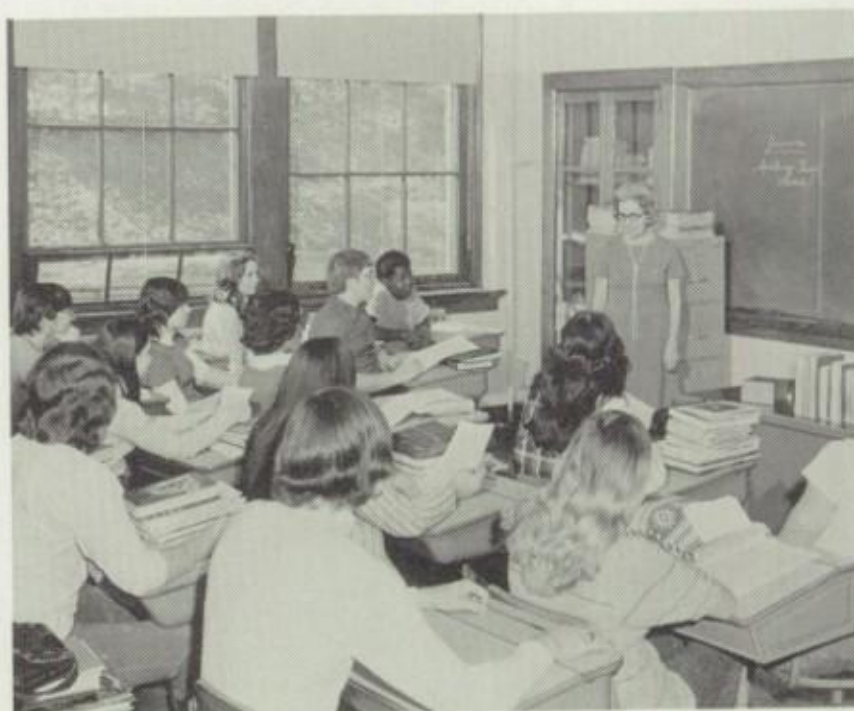

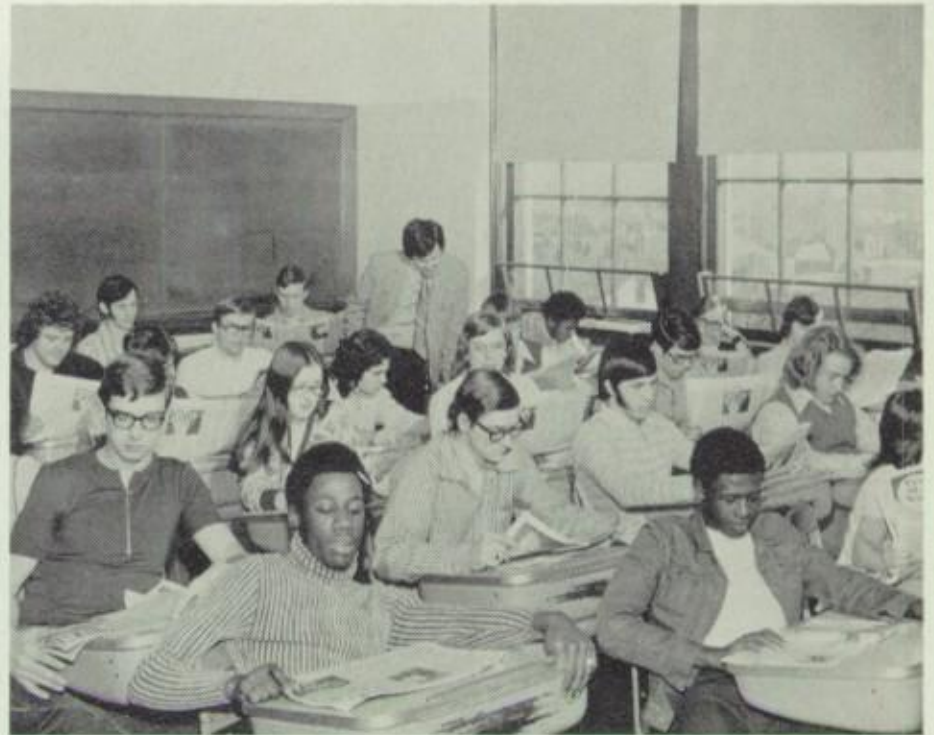

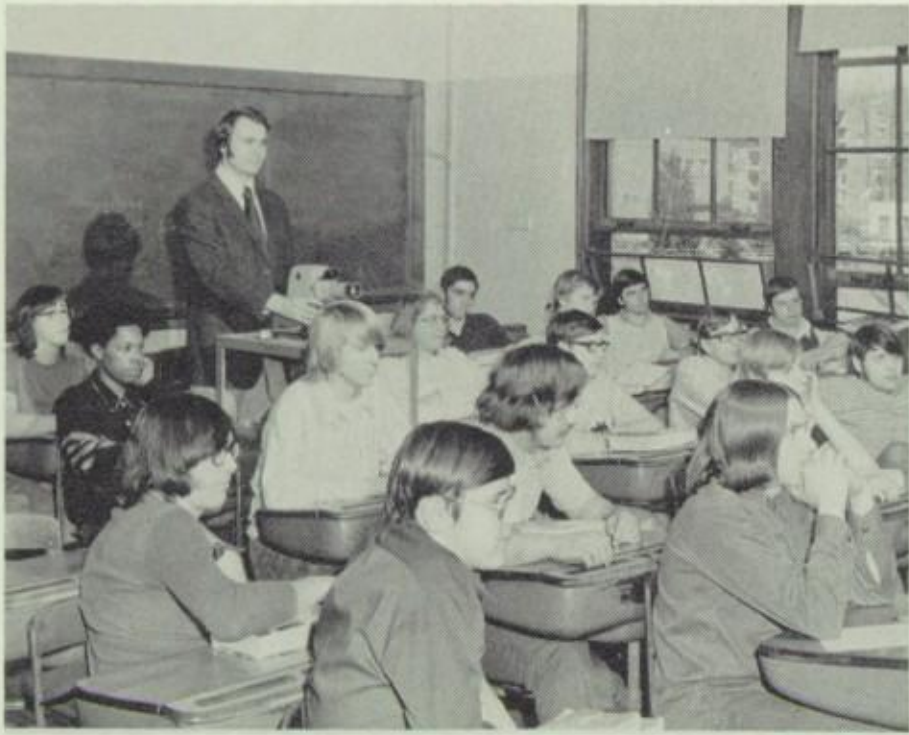

In chess there is an infinite number of possible moves. Before any move can be executed, however, a thorough knowledge of past and possible moves is desirable. This principle can be applied to scholastics, particularly to English and History.

Our English department helps students become well-versed in our language. English studies at JHS include: basic grammar courses, a diversified and interesting selection of literature (seniors read "Macbeth", juniors study House of Seven Gables and "Julius Caesar", and sophomores are challenged by "As You Like It" and A Tale of Two Cities), the required research paper for seniors, and public speaking.

HISTORY

The History Department, headed by Mr. Chromy, offers a wide selection of courses. These include: Ancient History, English History, Problems of Democracy, Economics and Current Events. These classes help the student understand and appreciate the rich heritage of the United States and become well-informed about contemporary society and current events.

JHS offers the background knowledge. Now, students, "It's your move!"

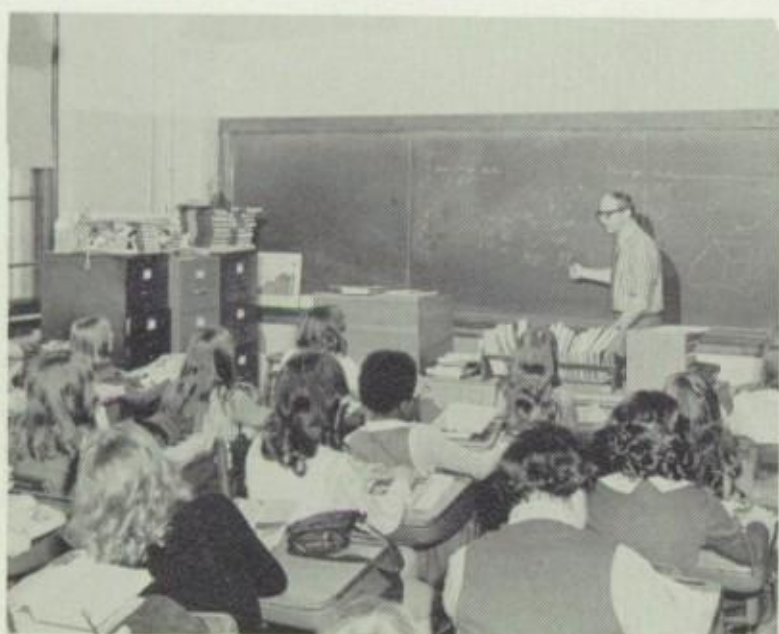

The cards are stacked. Everything today depends on effective communication. JHS is doing its best to prepare its students to succeed within this stacked deck.

JHS offered instruction in four languages: Spanish, by Señor Gonzalez del Valle and Señora Farra; German, by Herr Cooper; French, by Mlle Vrabel; and Latin, by Mr. Able. Impromptu skits, the language clubs, and sessions in the language lab, with all its tapes and recordings, enlivened these courses and made them interesting.

The more knowledgeable a card player is the greater the odds are in his favor for success. With the background in languages offered at JHS, the odds for the students' success are great.

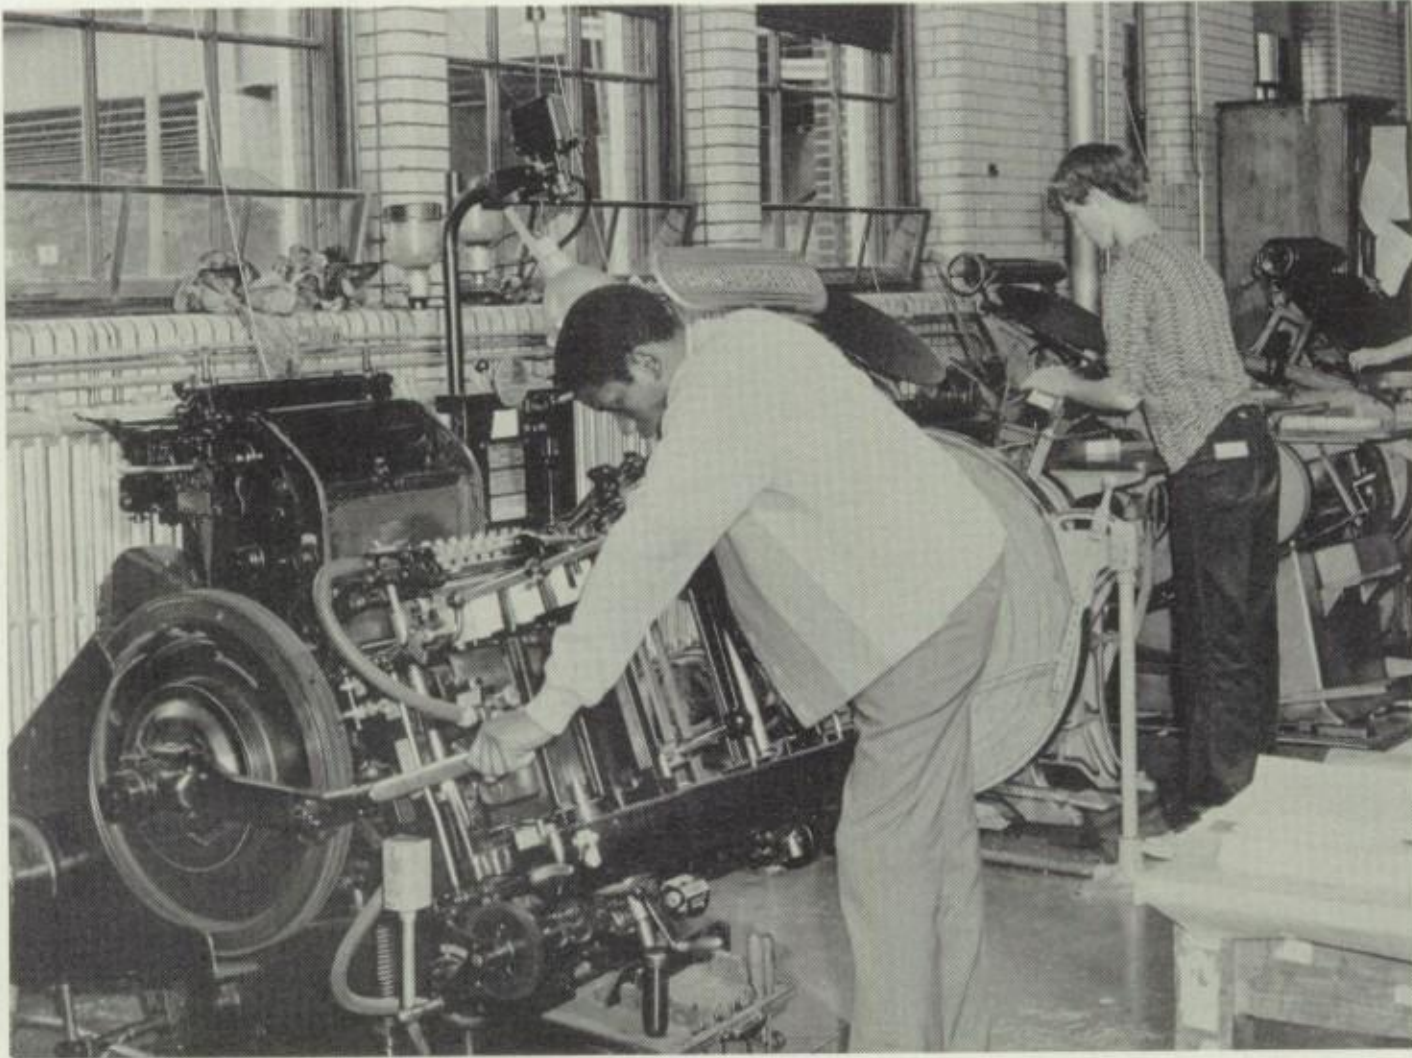

Two interesting courses offered to seniors this year are Physiology and Sociology. Both are half-year courses taught by two well-qualified teachers. Physiology deals with the anatomy and functions of the body while Sociology deals with people and the cultures they live in.

With a teacher like Mr. Harvey Rawlins, there's never a dull moment in Physiology class. The same holds true for Mr. Hanak's Sociology classes, where the students are given the opportunity to become involved in many interesting discussions.

PRINTERS

AT WORK

One of Johnstown High's greatest assets is its modern, up-to-date Print Shop, under the direction of instructor, Ken Artice.

The Print Shop prints a large majority of the materials for the Greater Johnstown School District, all materials for the clubs at JHS, the Centralizer (our school newspaper), programs for special productions of the drama and music departments at JHS, and the programs for the biggest event of the year—commencement.

The JHS Print Shop is open to students in 10th, 11th, and 12th grades, thus offering an opportunity for three years of actual work experience. Many graduates are placed in businesses in Johnstown, its surrounding areas and neighboring states.

All printing processes that are currently in use are available at JHS. These include off-set press work, photography, plate making, and other modern methods.

ARTISTS

AT WORK

Style—either you have it or you don't—and the students in the Arts and Crafts at JHS certainly have it.

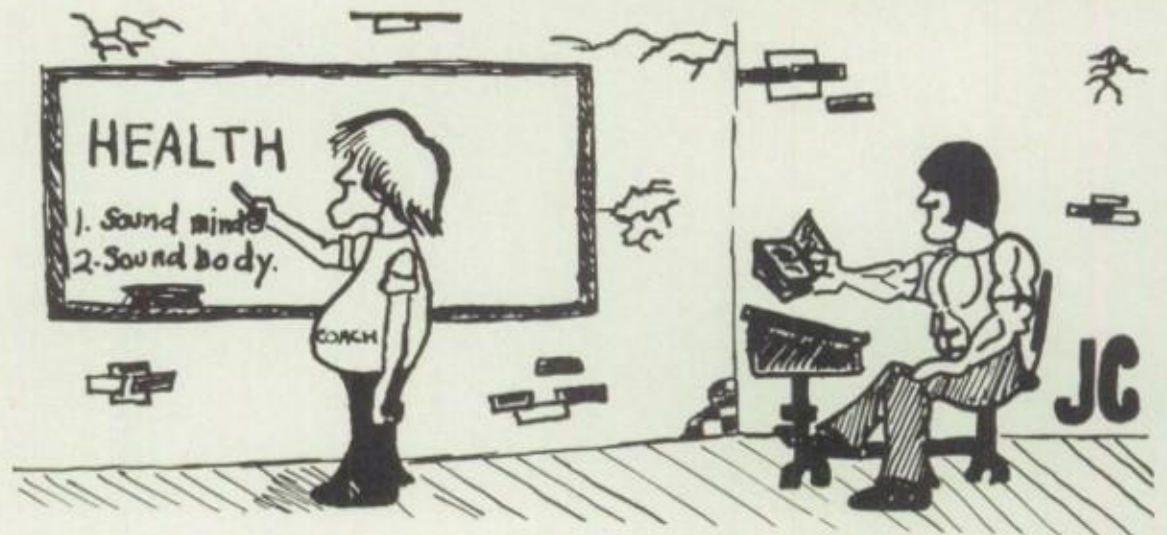

The unique style of each student was displayed in their many projects, which included posters for worthy causes, competition for prizes, and projects for their own enjoyment. The finished products brought many honors and awards to the students, including an art scholarship to Columbus College of Art and Design, first prize in Glosser Brothers' Annual Halloween Window-Painting Contest, Gold Key Awards from Kaufmann's store in Pittsburgh, and numerous prizes in poster contests.

The developing styles of the students were encouraged and nurtured under the guidance of Mrs. Josephine Quigley and Mrs. Georgia Meiers.

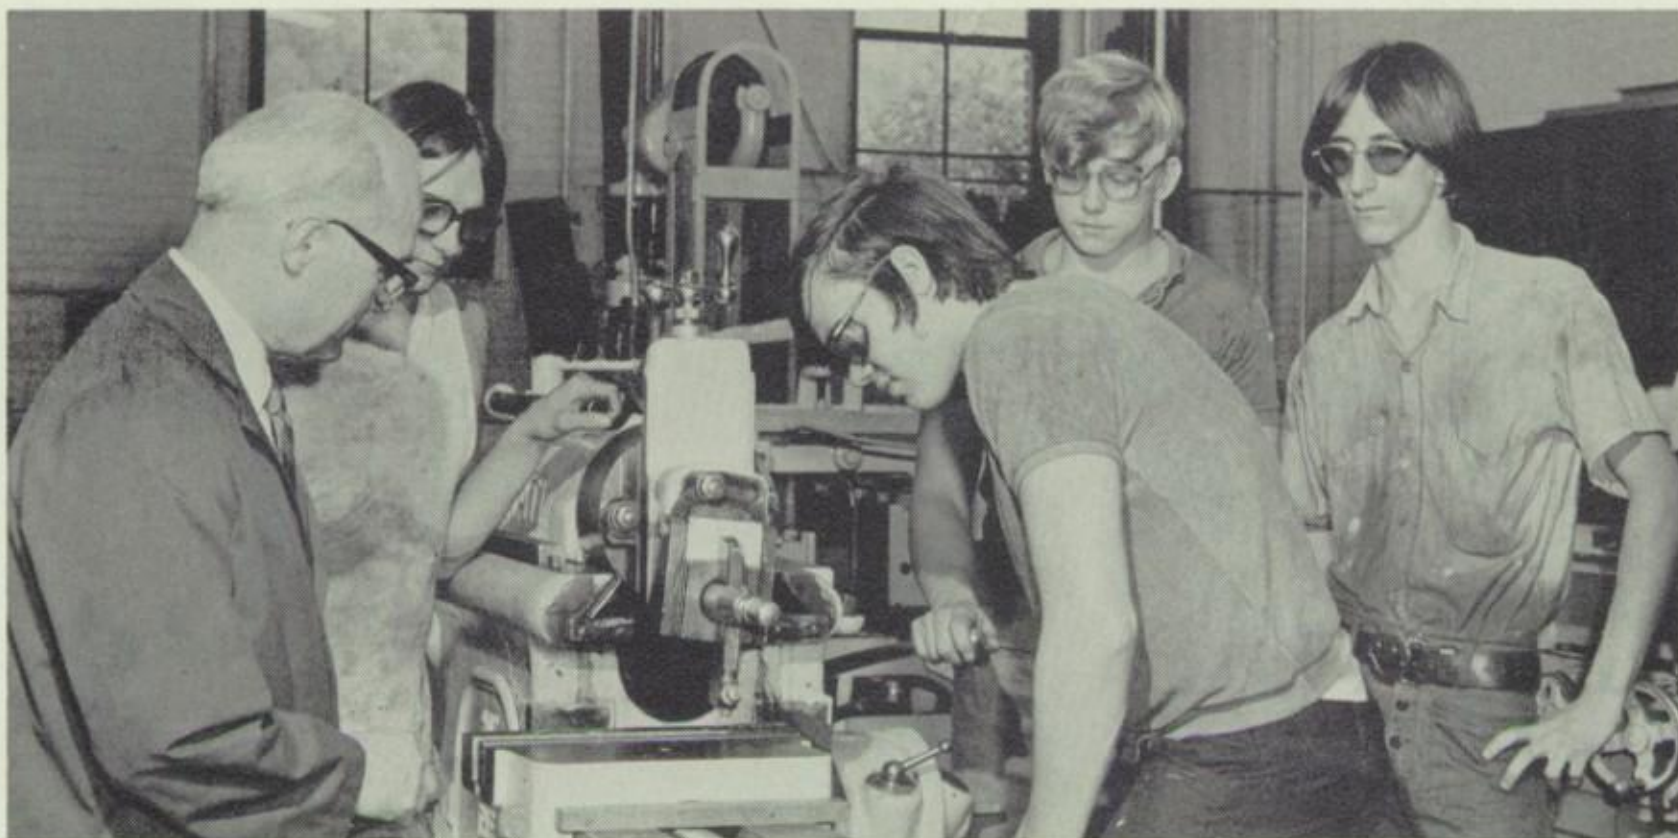

Health is a required course for seniors. The word "required" often conveys an unpleasant image of long, boring sessions of uninteresting trivia. This is not the case with Health at JHS. The students discussed such areas as first-aid, anatomy, the nine systems of the body, social hygiene, along with the relevant topics of alcohol, drugs and tobacco.

The guys were taught by Mr. Garbinski, Mr. Rawlins and Mr. Popp. The girls had Miss Hopko, Miss Pagano and Mrs. Huchel.

Since Johnstown is a highly industrialized area, there is a great demand for men trained to use the precision tools of industry. The Machine Shop at JHS, taught by Mr. Reighard, prepares its students to fill this demand and gives them experience in producing their own designs and tools. Combining their creativity with precise calculations develops skills that will be useful as the students seek employment in area industrial plants.

THE FI

One very lively department is the Drama Department. It consists mainly of two parts, Drama I and Drama II. The studies of Drama I include the history of the theatre, stage craft, and the building of model stages. Drama II is the stage crew behind all the school productions such as class plays and musicals. Coming into one of their classes, one might think that they do not get much work done. They work hard after school, though. Both classes use the video tape recorder. It records the voice along with the picture of the speaker. It is a well-rounded course for anyone interested in acting or the theatre.

This year's class play was The Skin Of Our Teeth. The three-act comedy was written by Thornton Wilder, the author of Our Town. The play ran three days, March 15, 16, and 17. Leads were played by Terri Vosko, Regina Wagner, Veronica Varga, John Felix, Karen Matolyak, Jim Cassidy, and Lynn Duray.

The story revolves around the Antrobus Family as they live through the Ice Age, the Great Flood, and other disasters by the skin of their teeth.

NE ARTS

Humanities

The Humanities course is in its second big year. Students taking this course study three dimensions of the fine arts—music, art, and literature. Students are under the supervision of Mr. Carl Miller, Mrs. Josephine Quigley, and Miss Olive Katter. A deep feeling for the fine arts is being established by the students. One word that can be used to describe the goal in Humanities is “appreciation.”

Oral Interpretation

If you happen to walk in on a group of students and hear stories such as Baby Bunny and Hanzel and Gretel being told, no doubt you’ve walked in on Oral Interpretation. The seniors in this class are taught the fine arts of public speaking on all levels. Story telling is just one type of speaking learned. They also learn the basics of formal speeches with the help of the video tape recorder. One of their activities this year was story telling in elementary schools. Programs varied from fairy tales to language arts. One might say their schedule was “pretty elementary.”

metal shop

Sheet Metal

The boys of the Sheet Metal shop at JHS have two advantages. One is the learning of a double skill. They not only work with sheets of metal, fashioning them into useful objects, but they also learn the art of welding. The other advantage the boys have is the supervision of Mr. George Risher. With these two assets, the boys of our metal shop are Number 1!

Electric

The bright lights of inspiration are always in full working condition at the Electric Shop. The students work to gain qualifications for many fields of electricity. They learn the practical application of skills and knowledge. With Mr. George Mandichak as the official torch bearer, their inspirations will be an eternal flame.

BODY

MECHANICS

How many boys get involved with beautiful bodies every day? The boys from Auto Body do! Under the guidance of Mr. Frank Krall, the boys learn everything from welding to painting. Demonstrations, illustrations, and other audio-visual aids are used to help the boys develop the skills they'll need for the future. You're in good hands with the J.H.S. Auto Body.

Transportation is one of the most important phases of American life and the boys of Auto Mechanics are some of the most important phases of transportation at J.H.S. The boys are really apprentices under the master leadership of Mr. Robert Rhodes. They learn to keep the school district automobiles, as well as their own, "hummin." The boys turned out of this shop will find the door to the future wide open.

DRIVERS

EDUCATION

One of the worst publicized phases of American life is driving. Safety is stressed yearly for adults as well as teenagers.

At Johnstown High, we are doing our part to promote better informed motorists. It is a very lucid fact that the most effective medium for achieving traffic violation reduction lies in the training of young drivers. High school boys and girls are taught the intelligent and safe use of the automobile. The most practical way to make good drivers is to mold their driving habits before they get behind the wheel.

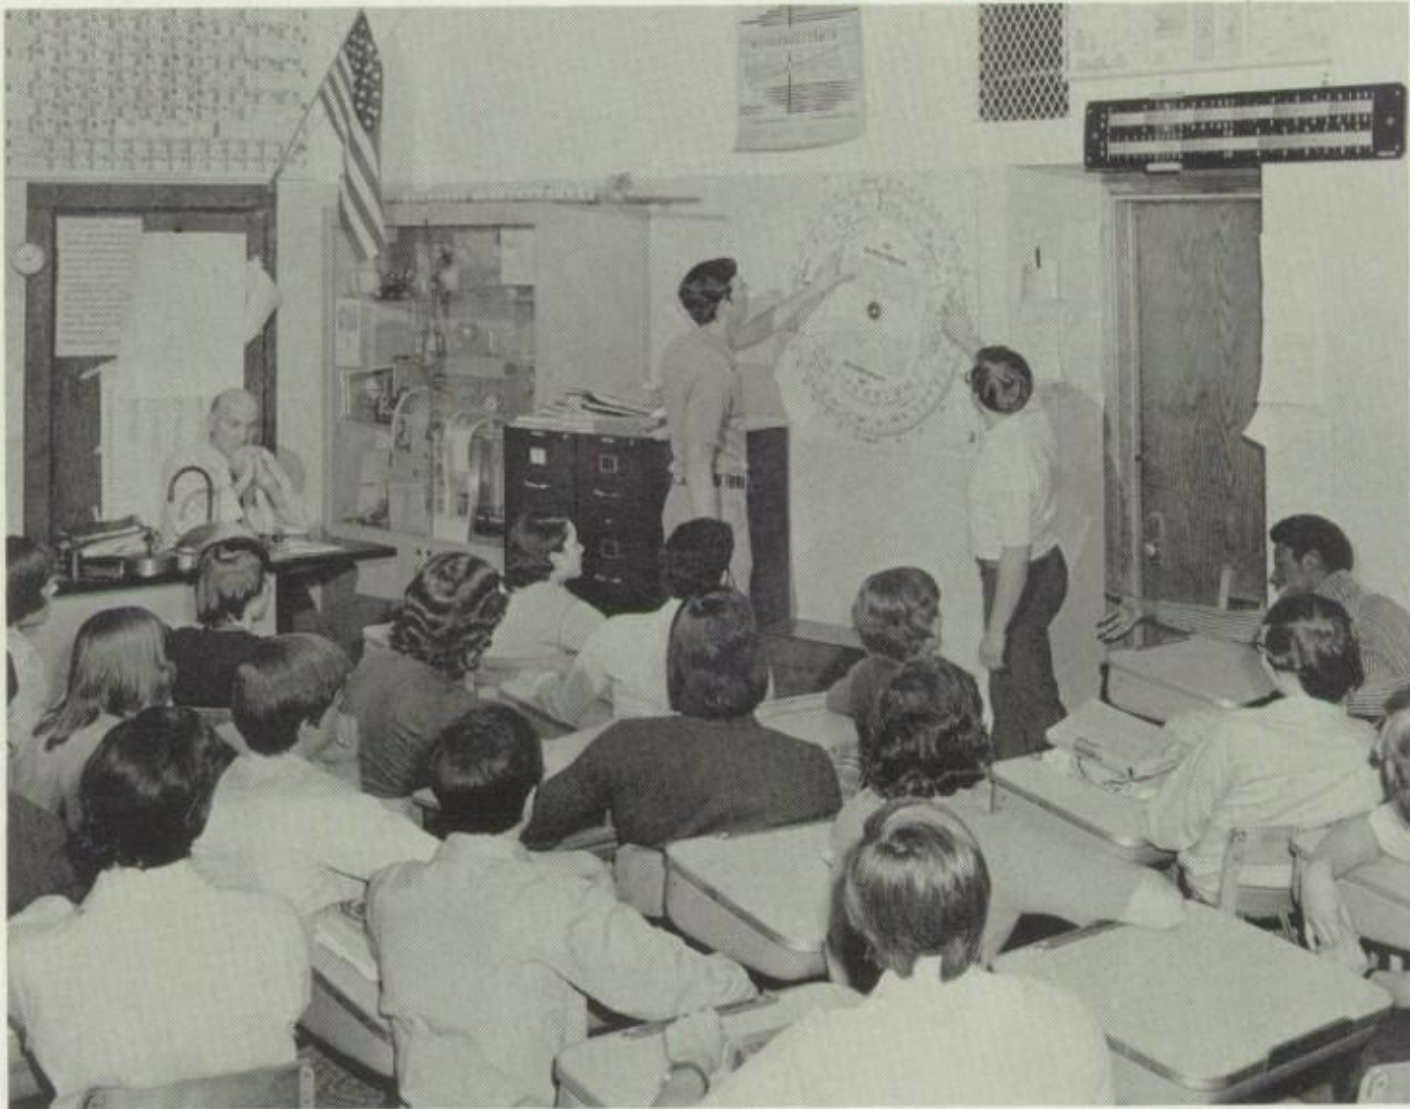

For a few weeks, students at J.H.S. get some preliminary instructions. They are taught the basic traffic rules, the proper handling of the car, and some information as to what makes the car go.

This year many cars have been at the mercy of many eager high school students striving to become competent drivers. Each day, under the patient and cheerful supervision of Mr. Kauffman and his staff, students get the chance to learn the ABC's of highway driving. In this way, schools all over America are doing their part to make this a safer mechanical age.

LOST IN SPACE

Lost In Space

The boys in the aeronautic classes at JHS will never have to worry about being lost in space, or anywhere else for that matter. This is because they study the conditions and fundamentals of successful flying. Maps and charts have a special meaning to them.

"Captain" Weigle is piloting the boys toward home. "Home" for them is a career in aero-space, engineering, navigation, the armed forces, or commercial flying. Once they reach home, you'll probably see them calculating a course for Planet Success.

Shhh... QUIET PLEASE

Library

Tip-toe through the bookstacks,
Past the front desk
To the magazine racks.
Tip-toe through the library with me.

That's the song they sing, or should we say hum very softly, in the JHS library. The most important aspect of the library, though, is the unlimited supply of study aids. They have everything from books to magazines and from newspapers to pamphlets all for the use of JHS students. With the supervision of Mrs. Helen Shirk and Miss Twila Wassum, it's the place to go for all the information one needs.

"Look out Harrisburg, here we come!"

Would you buy a used car from this man?

"You wanted equal rights, you got 'em."

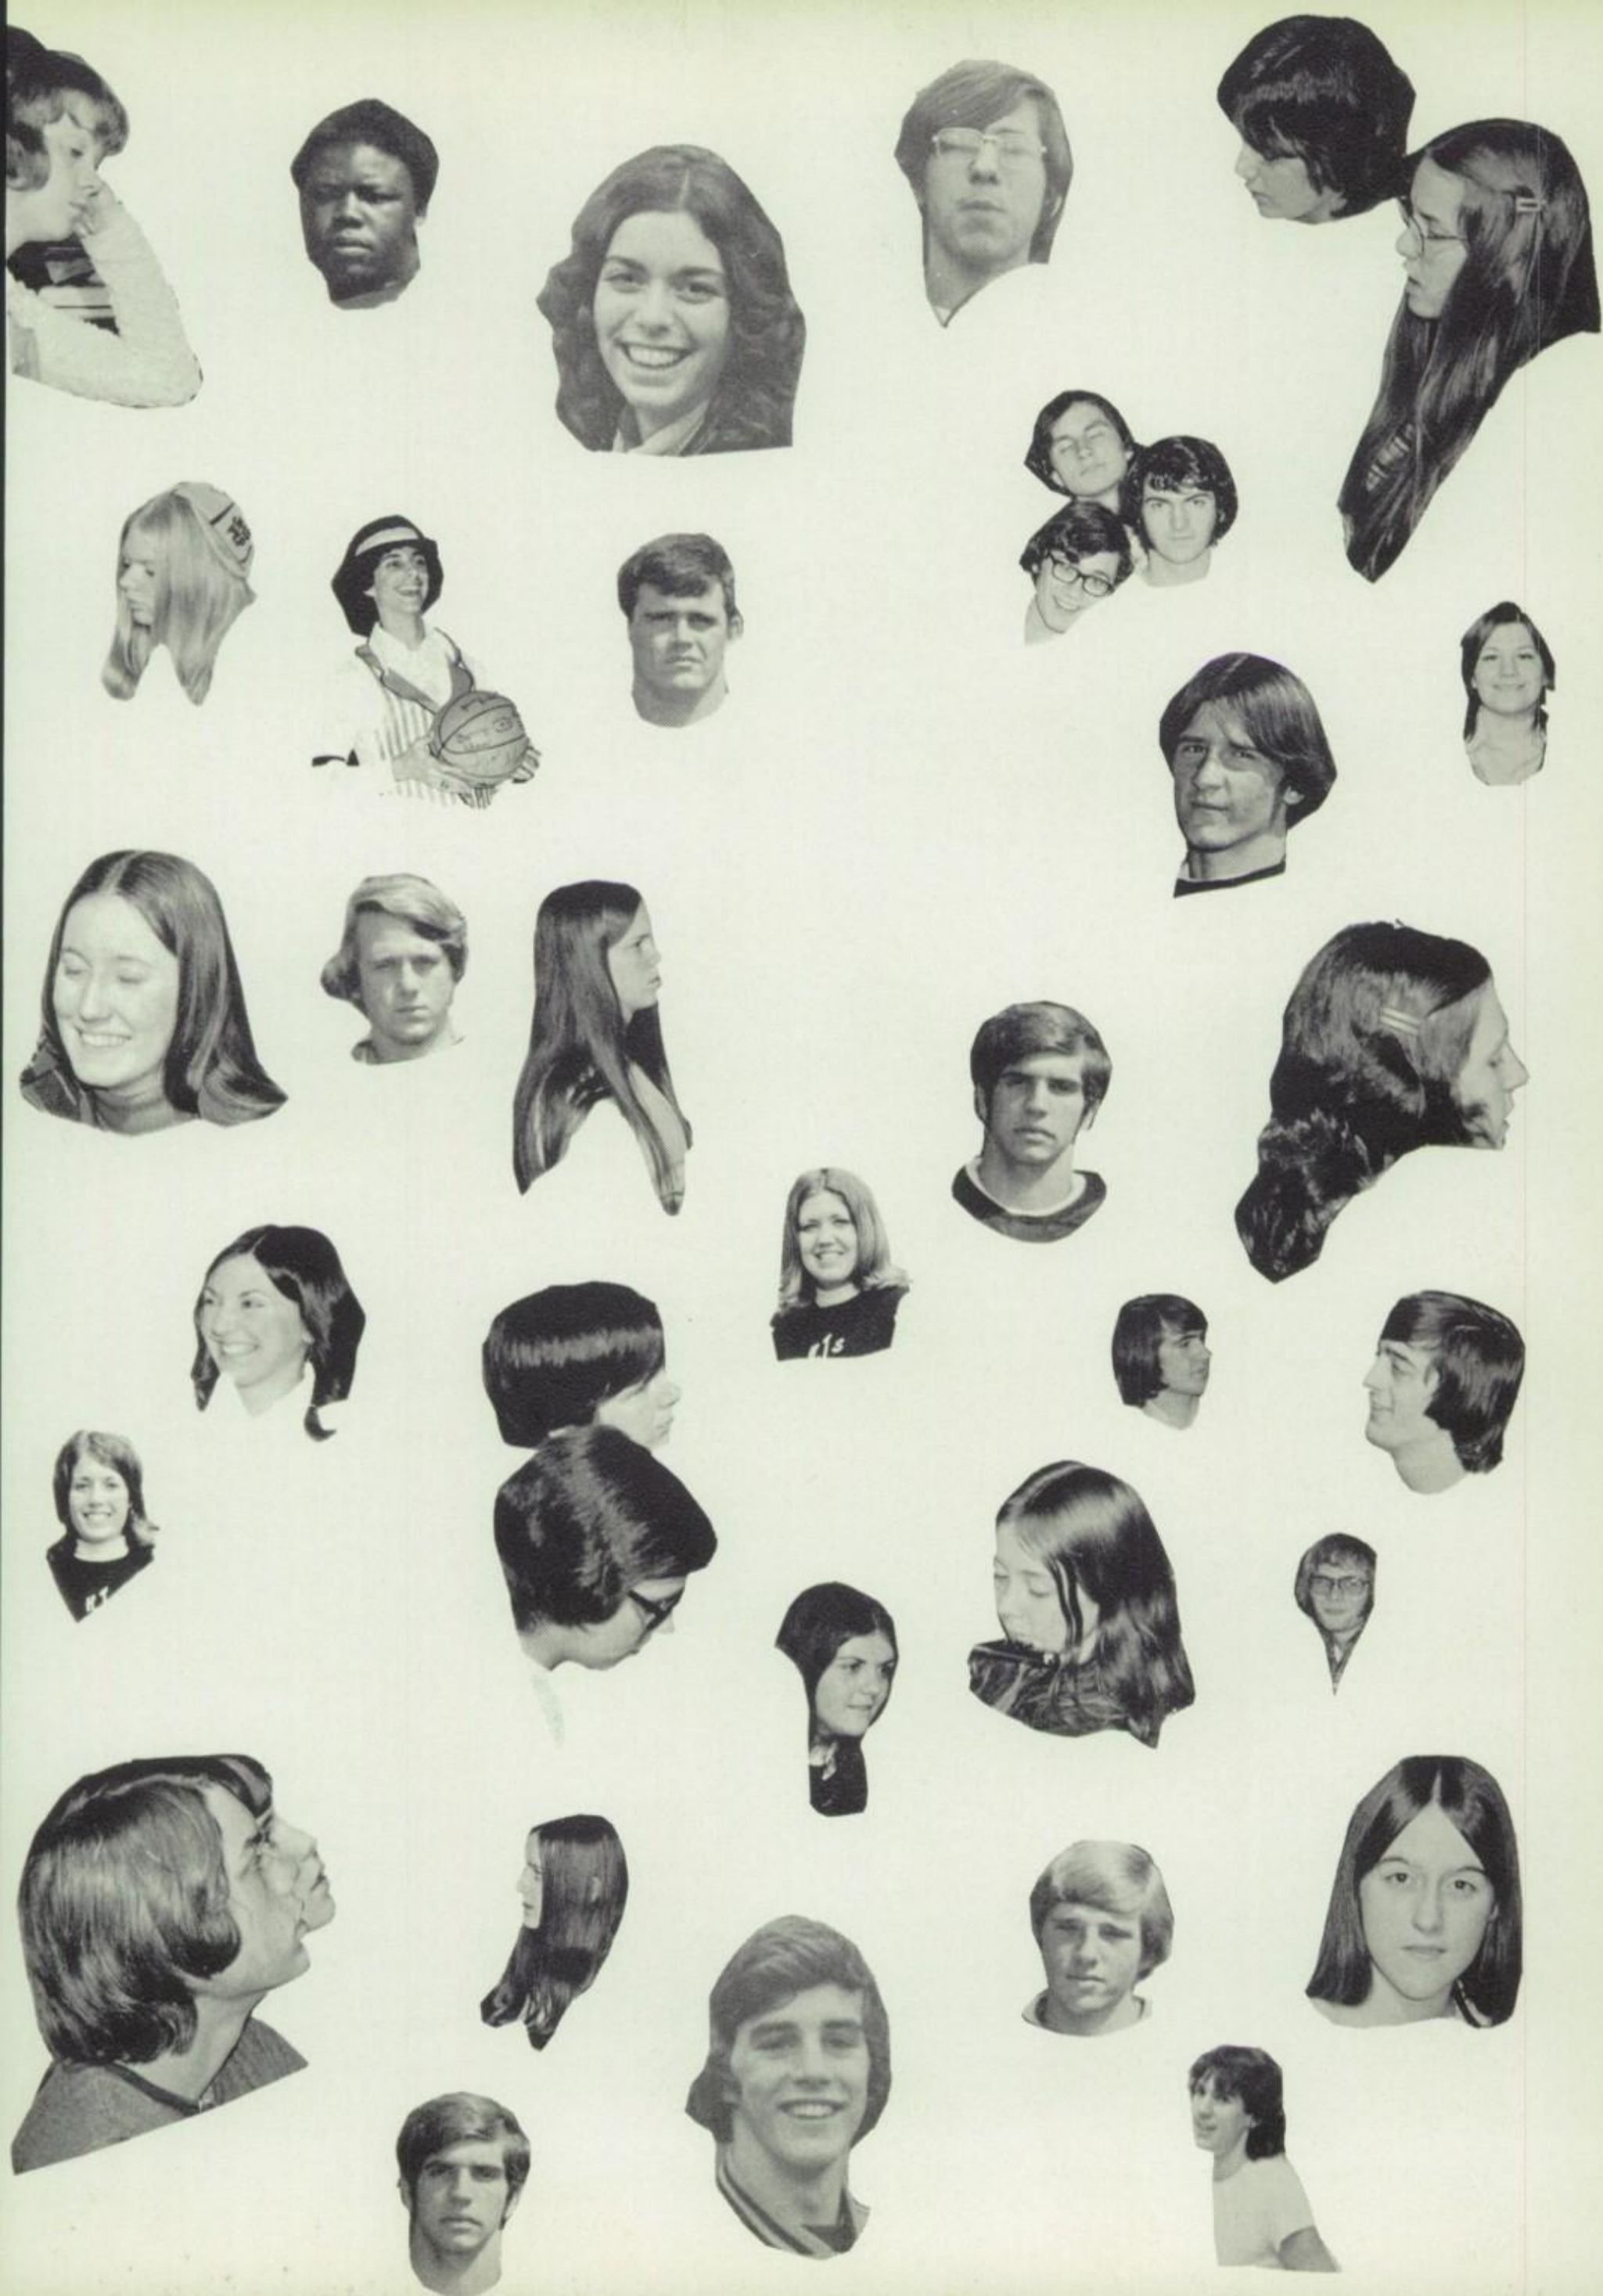

"I wonder if it's anything like horsepower."

"Spirit, enthusiasm, and attitude are 90% of building a winning football team. This 1972 team of Johnstown High School had many individuals who expressed the qualities of such a winner, but we couldn't put it all together. The seniors who worked so hard to lead us will be missed, but they left behind the key to the Trojans' hopes of the future - determination."

TROJAN "SWINGERS"

With 8 wins, 3 losses and 1 tie the golf team ended its season with high spirits. The team came in 5th place in the Wheeling Scholastic Tourney. In order to play a good game, our golfers insist that you need good eyesight, a strong shoulder, and shoes that are made for walking.

"Practice makes perfect!"

"Swimmers, take your mark." That's right! The swim team has returned to J.H.S. Our boys' swim team swam to finish the regular season boasting a 3-1 record and tied with Richland for first place in the boys' division of the Central-Western Aqua Conference Title. In a swimoff, they sank Richland and took sole possession of the title. Our boys gained more laurels by taking the PIAA District 6 Championship in a triangular meet. The girls ended their season with one tie and three losses. Next year's girls' swim team is expected to come out on top due to the majority of the girls returning next year.

Sue Woloschuk

This year's girls' basketball team, coached by Mrs. Lois Huchel and Miss Cindy Pagano, had ten girls returning from the previous year. The girls worked very hard and scored victories of 46-15 over Indiana and 46-28 over Conemaugh Valley.

The Richland Rams topped the Trojans 44-42 in a hard-fought game on October 19th in the J.H.S. gym. The game was televised on Channel 8 by the Johnstown Cable T.V. The high scorer for the season was Lisa Britt, a sophomore at J.H.S. with a total of 171 points. Their season began September 27 and ended November 6th.

GIRLS' VOLLEYBALL TEAM

This year's JHS girls' volleyball squad completed the regular season boasting a 9-1 record and took the division championship on April 17, 1973. Our girls captured the Central-Western Girls' Volleyball Conference championship by whopping Indiana 15-11 in the first game and 15-4 in the second.

Senior members of the team were Naomi Weaver, Donna Rehn, Teresa Orloski, Linda Krouse, Josephine Hubbard, Donna Fields, Chris Fitzpatrick, and Mary Jo Bickford. Juniors included Pam Thomas, Debby Shaffer, Debbie Legg, Donna Shaffer, Sue Saptichen, Mary Kay Rosko, Diane Pavlick, Debbie Howling, Debbie Gaydos, Robin Cruse, and Jackie Collins. Rounding out the team were the sophomores. They were Sandie Schultz, Dawn Catanese, Tracy Calhoun, and Lisa Britt. The coach of this fine team was Mrs. Lois Huchel. Miss Cindy Pagano was the assistant coach.

An outstanding coaching staff and a fine summer baseball program traditionally produce a strong Trojan baseball team. Led by Tom McGough and six other senior starters the Trojans ended in a tie for the Section 4 title of the Tri-County League. Because of inclement weather the season was cut short and no champion was declared. Senior members of the team included: Tom Rutledge CF, Robert Shaffer SS, Chuck Santa C, Bob Olenik 1B, Mike Picklo RF, Jim Fry P, Ron Stenger P, Ray Stenger P, Larry Alwine C, and Jim Molnar 3B.

Two Superstars Meet! Willie and Donny.

Maser makes War Memorial All-Tourney Team!

Up and In. Do It Again, Don!!!

Maser, a name that has brought as much publicity to the city of Johnstown, as the Johnstown flood. And rightfully so; the polite 6'5" Kerneville lad captured high single game mark 43 points, career high mark 1400 points, and high single season mark 664 points. With Maser leading the undefeated Trojans, they brought to the city the first War Memorial-Tournament title in twenty years. Maser was named the tourney's outstanding player, as well as being on the All-Tourney team. He made All-District team for the second straight year and was also picked to play in the Dapper Dan Roundball Classic. Not many people know the true Maser. As a young boy he dedicated his ambitions to basketball. He learned from others, but never forgot them. He worked hard for the time when he could show people what he could do. The time has come and now others learn from him. What do you write about a person that words can't express, but

We Love You, Don!!!

Our dynamic Junior Varsity basketball squad, coached by Mr. John Sladki, ended the season with 10 victories against 7 setbacks. The troubleshooters included juniors Dale Cruse, Mark Kaharick, Mike Klonicki, Toni Ramierz, and Barry Groebal. Sophomores were Randy Lear, Jim Maser, Earl Gregly, Keith Woznick, Kevin Schneider, Al Young, Jim Lavis, and Darby Sprintz. These boys will be facing the difficult task of repeating the outstanding season of this year's varsity squad.

THE END OF A BIG DREAM

J.S.H.S. vs. G.J.H.S.

The Big Blue Machine rolled over the Jersey Shore Bulldogs, with an 85-41 smash. The Trojans led from the opening tap and never trailed thereafter. Maser, Cummings, and Kaharick led the Trojans with double-figured scores. Their 23rd straight win handed the Trojans their ticket for the District 6 Class A Championship Game, the first step toward their dream.

J.H.S. Manhandles Vo-Tech

Greater Johnstown finally captured the District 6 Class A Title, which had eluded them the past two years. The 72-58 triumph took place before 4,965 spirited fans. The victory backed Coach Litwalk's theory that Vo-Tech doesn't belong on the Trojans' schedule. The Trojans, now one step closer to their dream, take their undefeated streak into Inter-District Play.

Trojans Puncture Punxsy

With four Trojans in double-figures, the Big Blue Machine raced to their 25th victory without a defeat. The 73-41 contest brings the Trojans one step closer to their goal. The Trojans now 25-0, are ranked No. 1 in the state of Pennsylvania. 2,048 fans watched the Men of Troy turn back the Woodchucks.

The Defeat of J.H.S.

Before the Trojans knew they were playing, the Sharon Tigers were off to a 12-0 start, from which we never recovered. With only two Trojans, Maser and Cummings, in double-figures, the Men of Troy managed to score 41 points against Sharon's 77 points. Four starters fouled out and watched their dream and the dreams of thousands vanish.

JOHN KAMNIKAR AWARD

Tom McGough 1973 John Kamnikar Award Recipient

The John Kamnikar Award was originated in 1961. It is awarded to a senior athlete with outstanding scholastic achievement. John Kamnikar, in whose memory the award is presented, was to have been the starting quarterback on the 1960-1961 football squad. In the summer of 1960 John and his girlfriend (would have been a senior at Bishop McCort) were killed in a car accident on old Route 219. Because of John's dedication and leadership in athletics, the coaching staff and administration of the 1960-1961 school year dediced to annually honor a senior athlete to keep John's memory alive.

This year's winner of the John Kamnikar award was Tom McGough. He received this award because of his outstanding scholastic achievements throughout his high school career and also because of his accomplishments in the sport of baseball at Johnstown High School. Tom was a member of the varsity team in his freshman year and he then went on to letter in his next three years. Tom played as a pitcher and an outfielder during his high school career. He has dedicated his life to mastering the skills of baseball and hopes to be a major league baseball player in the near future. Tom was drafted fourth by the Cleveland Indians and signed his pro contract June 19, 1973.

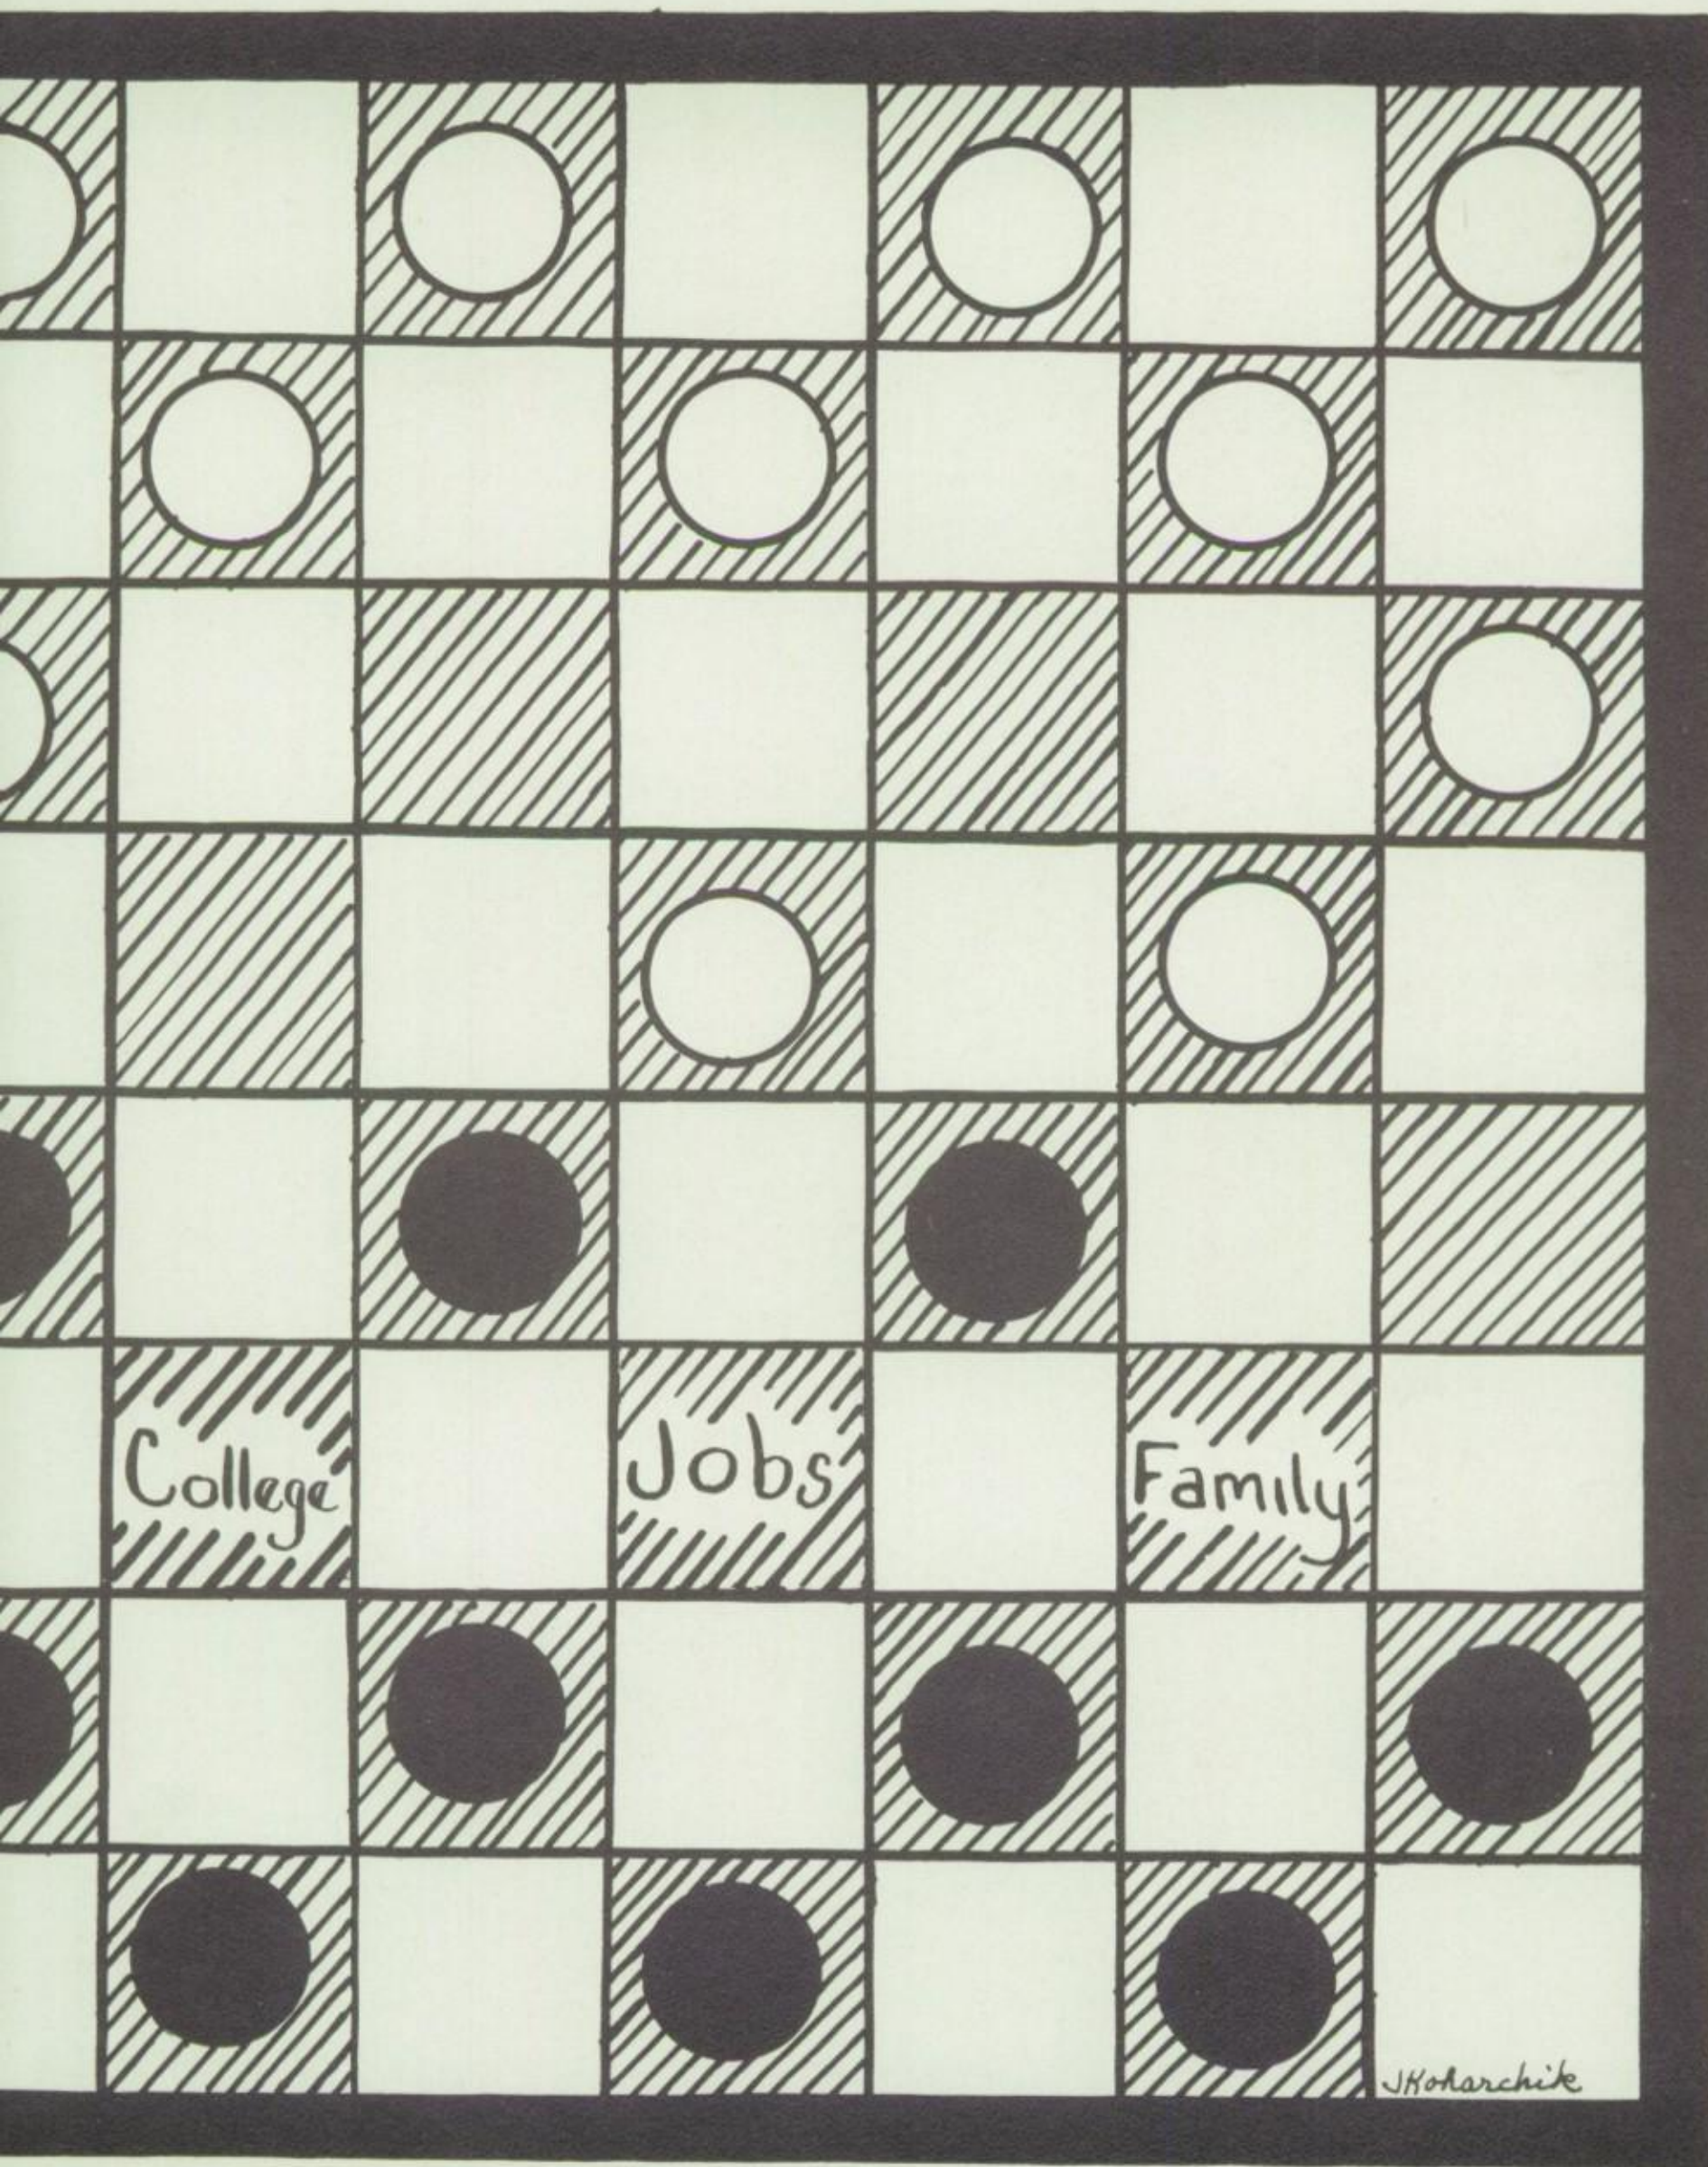

Congratulations and Good Luck, Tom

VARIETY SHOW

This year the J.H.S. drama department threw together a few songs, dances, skits, and gymnastics and called it "Variety Show." This was the first Variety Show we've had in a number of years. With the four masters of ceremonies and the one mistress of ceremonies tying the show together, it turned out to be another J.H.S. best.

AUCTION

The 1973 Action Auction, sponsored by Senior Activities, was a rousing success. Various items such as clothing, records, people, and last but not least, a dog were auctioned off. Not only did it provide money for this year's Senior Class but also excitement and fun for the entire student body.

TRADITION! This was the theme of the Broadway musical "Fiddler on the Roof," which was presented by the very talented students at J.H.S. on May 10, 11, and 12 in the high school auditorium.

The leading roles were played by John Felix, Denise Strandquest, Gail Lewis, Rose DeAngelo, Debra Babel, Nick Waynik, Steve Barber, Joseph "Chip" Galagaza, and Terri Vosko. Some of the songs included "Tradition," "Matchmaker," "If I Were A Rich Man, and "Sunrise, Sunset." A special MAZELTOV to the cast and crew for a job well done.

JUNE 7, 1973

1973 Class Officers: Secretary, Janice Yursky; President, Andrew Polca; Vice President, David Stiles; Treasurer, Jeanne Delich

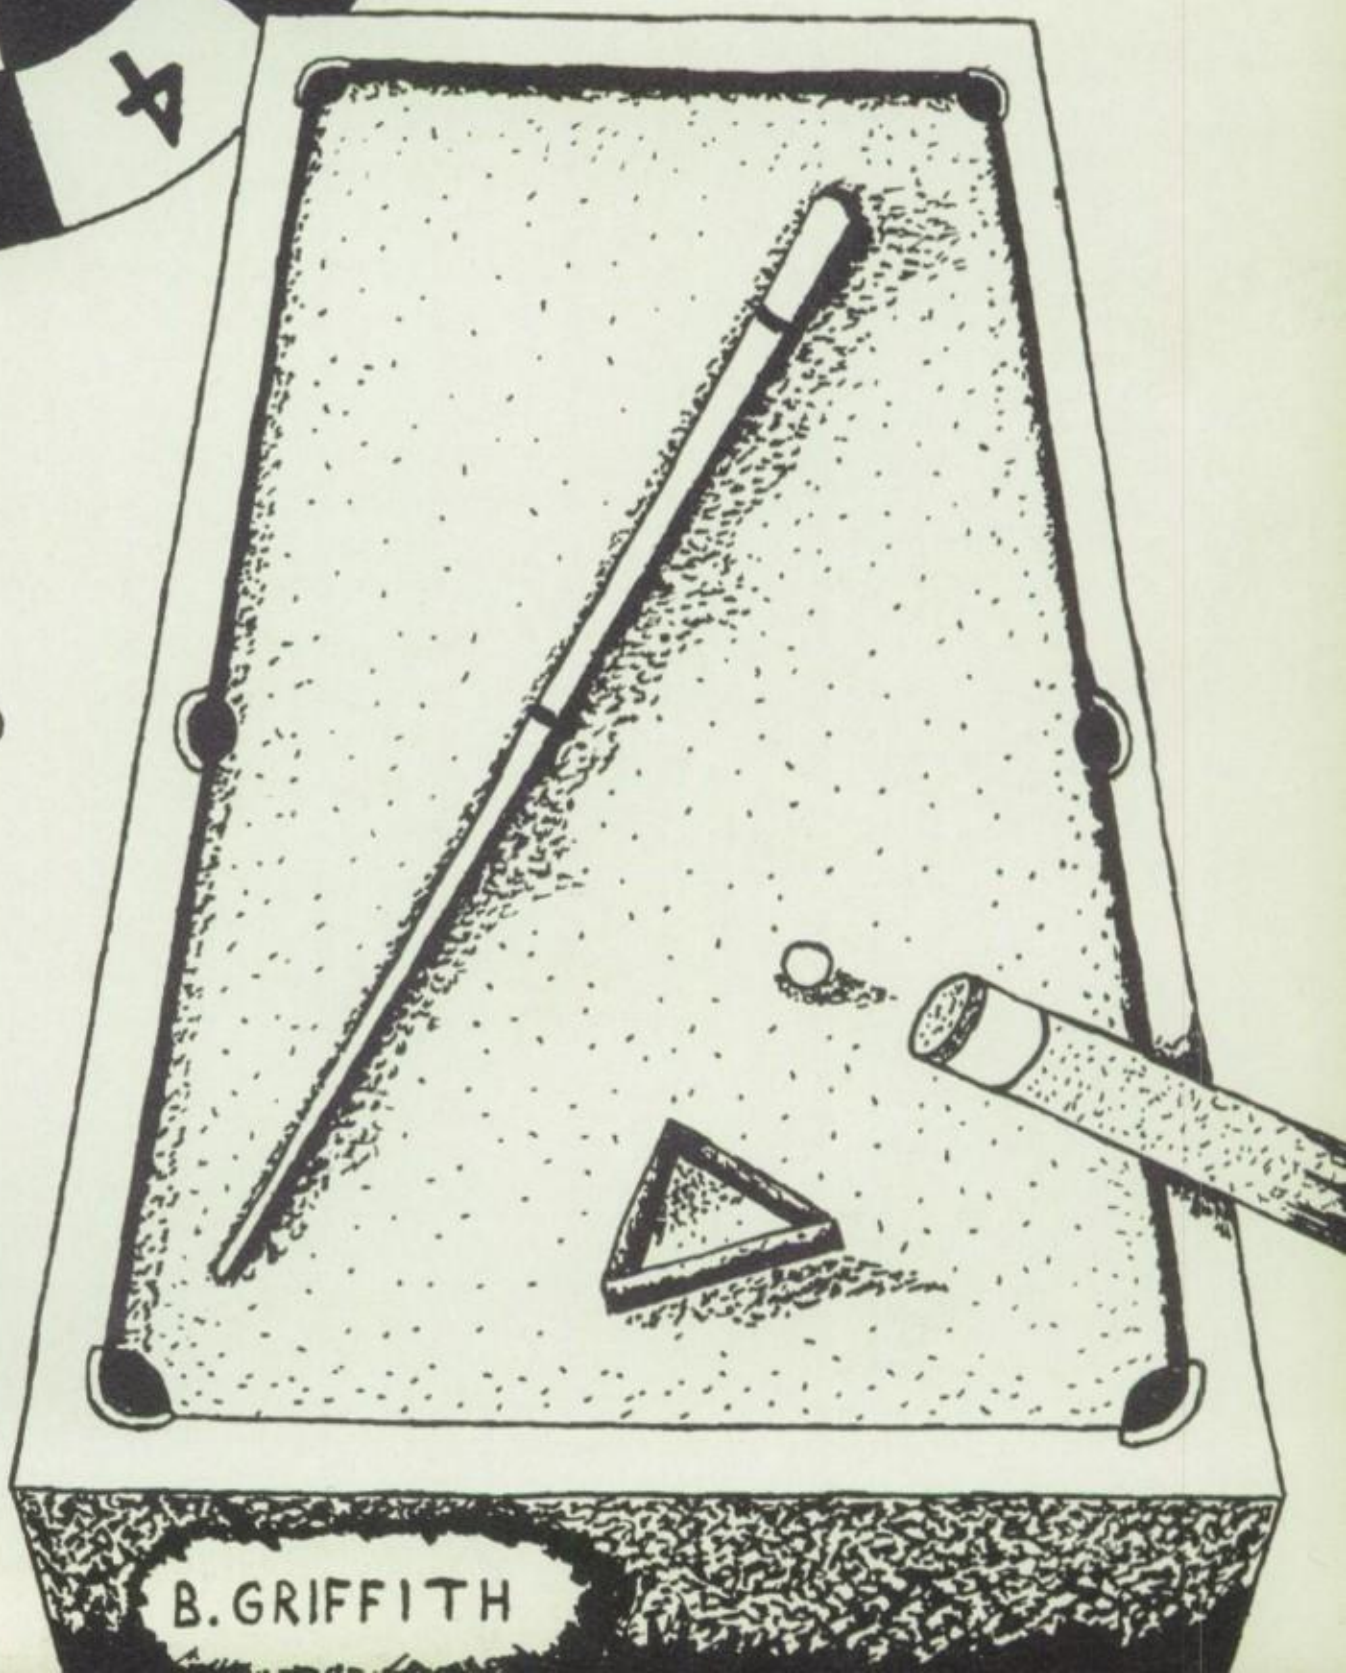

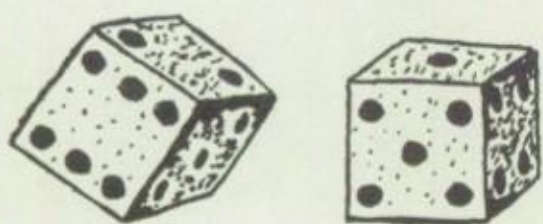

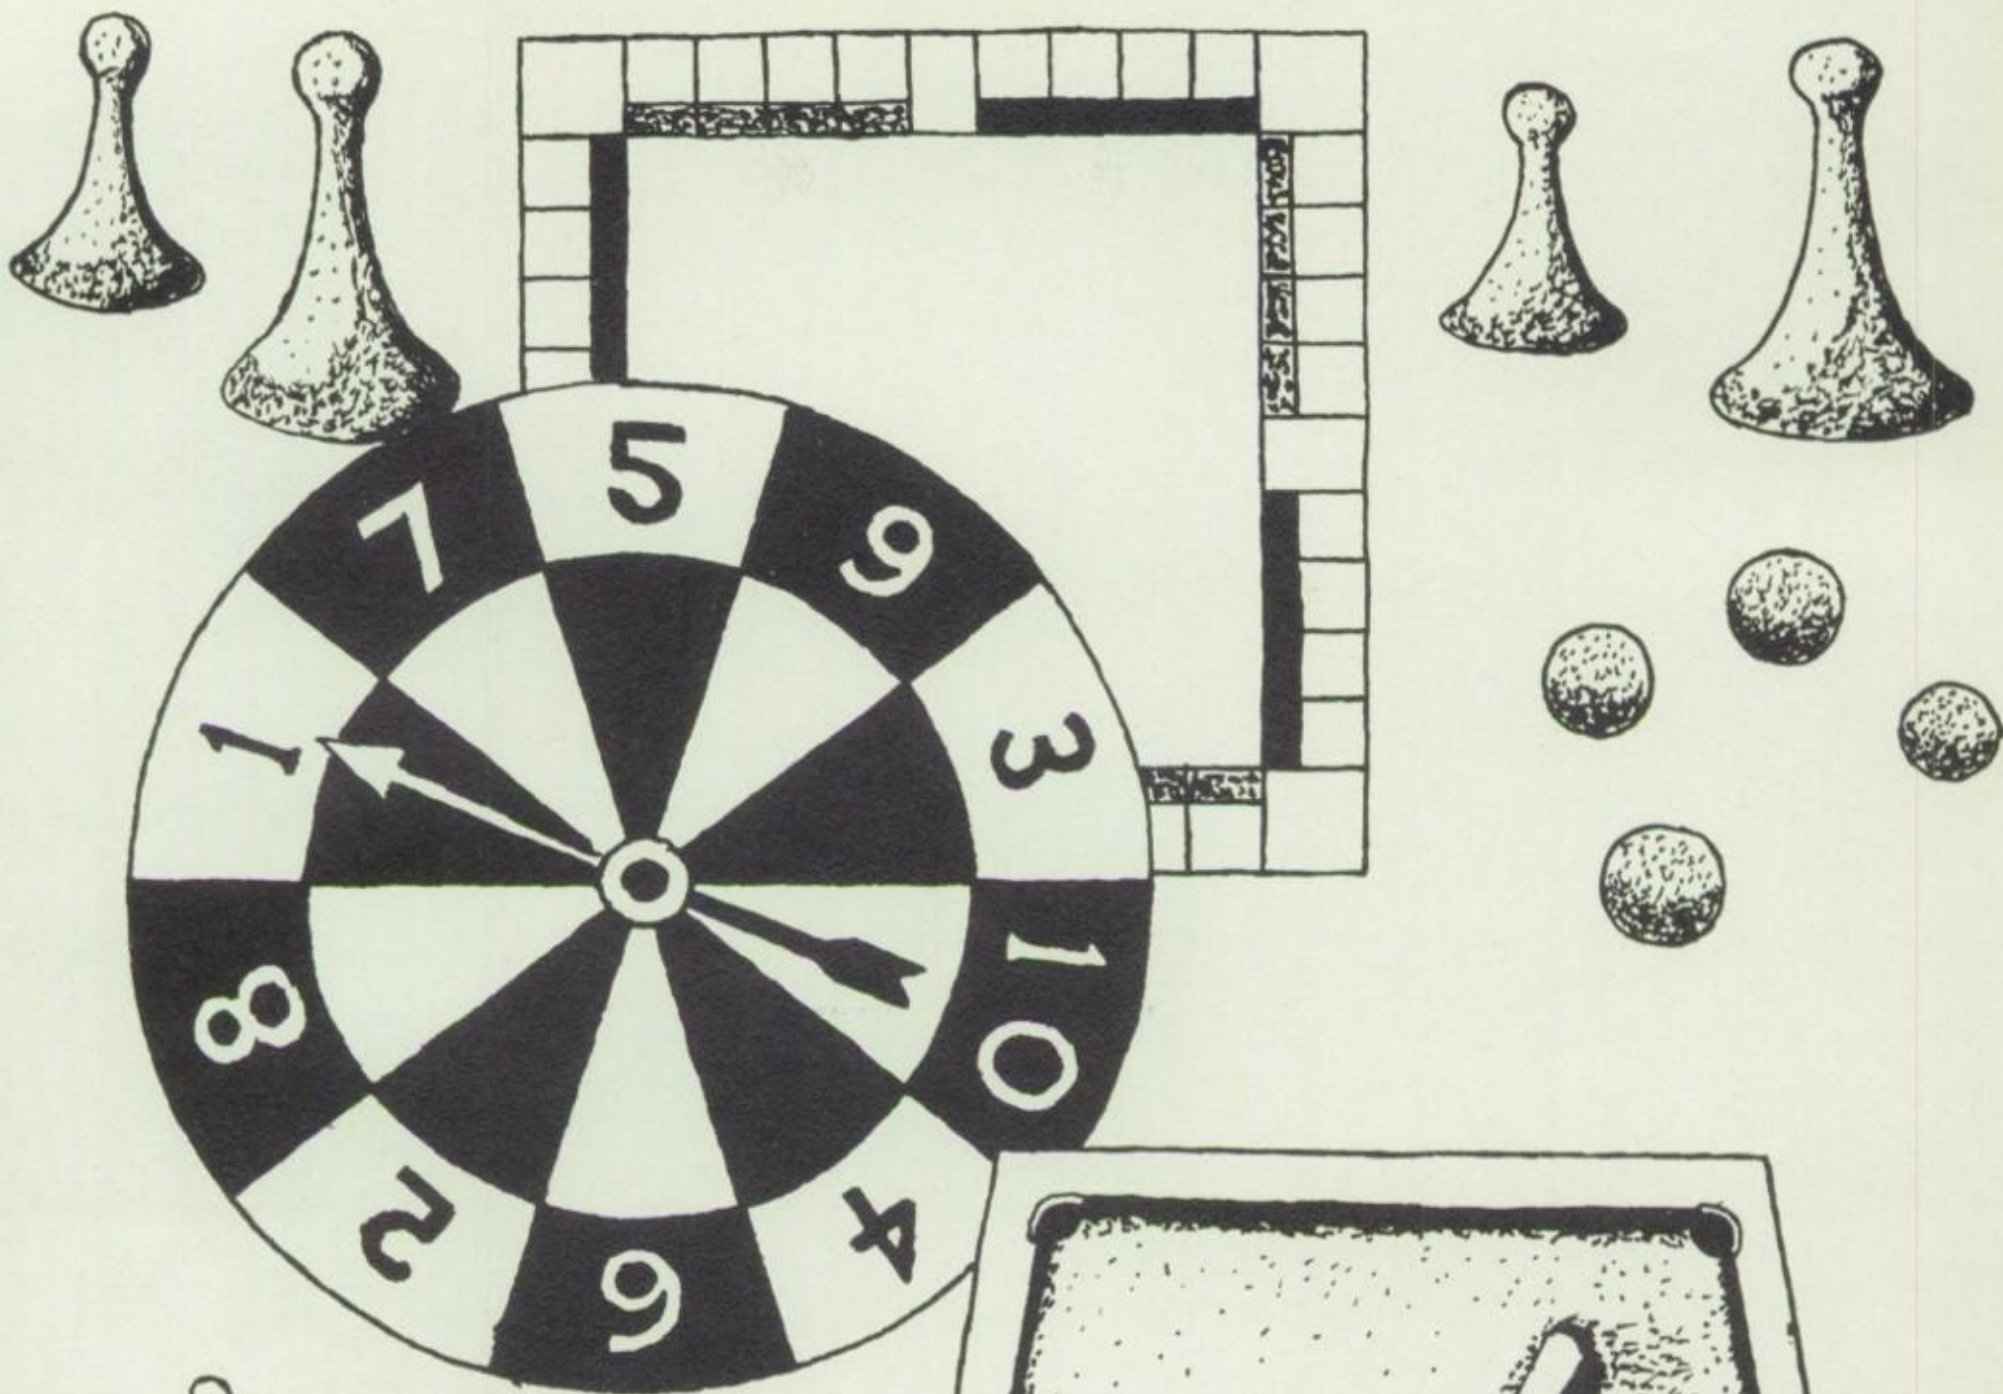

Commencement Exercises were held at the War Memorial Arena.

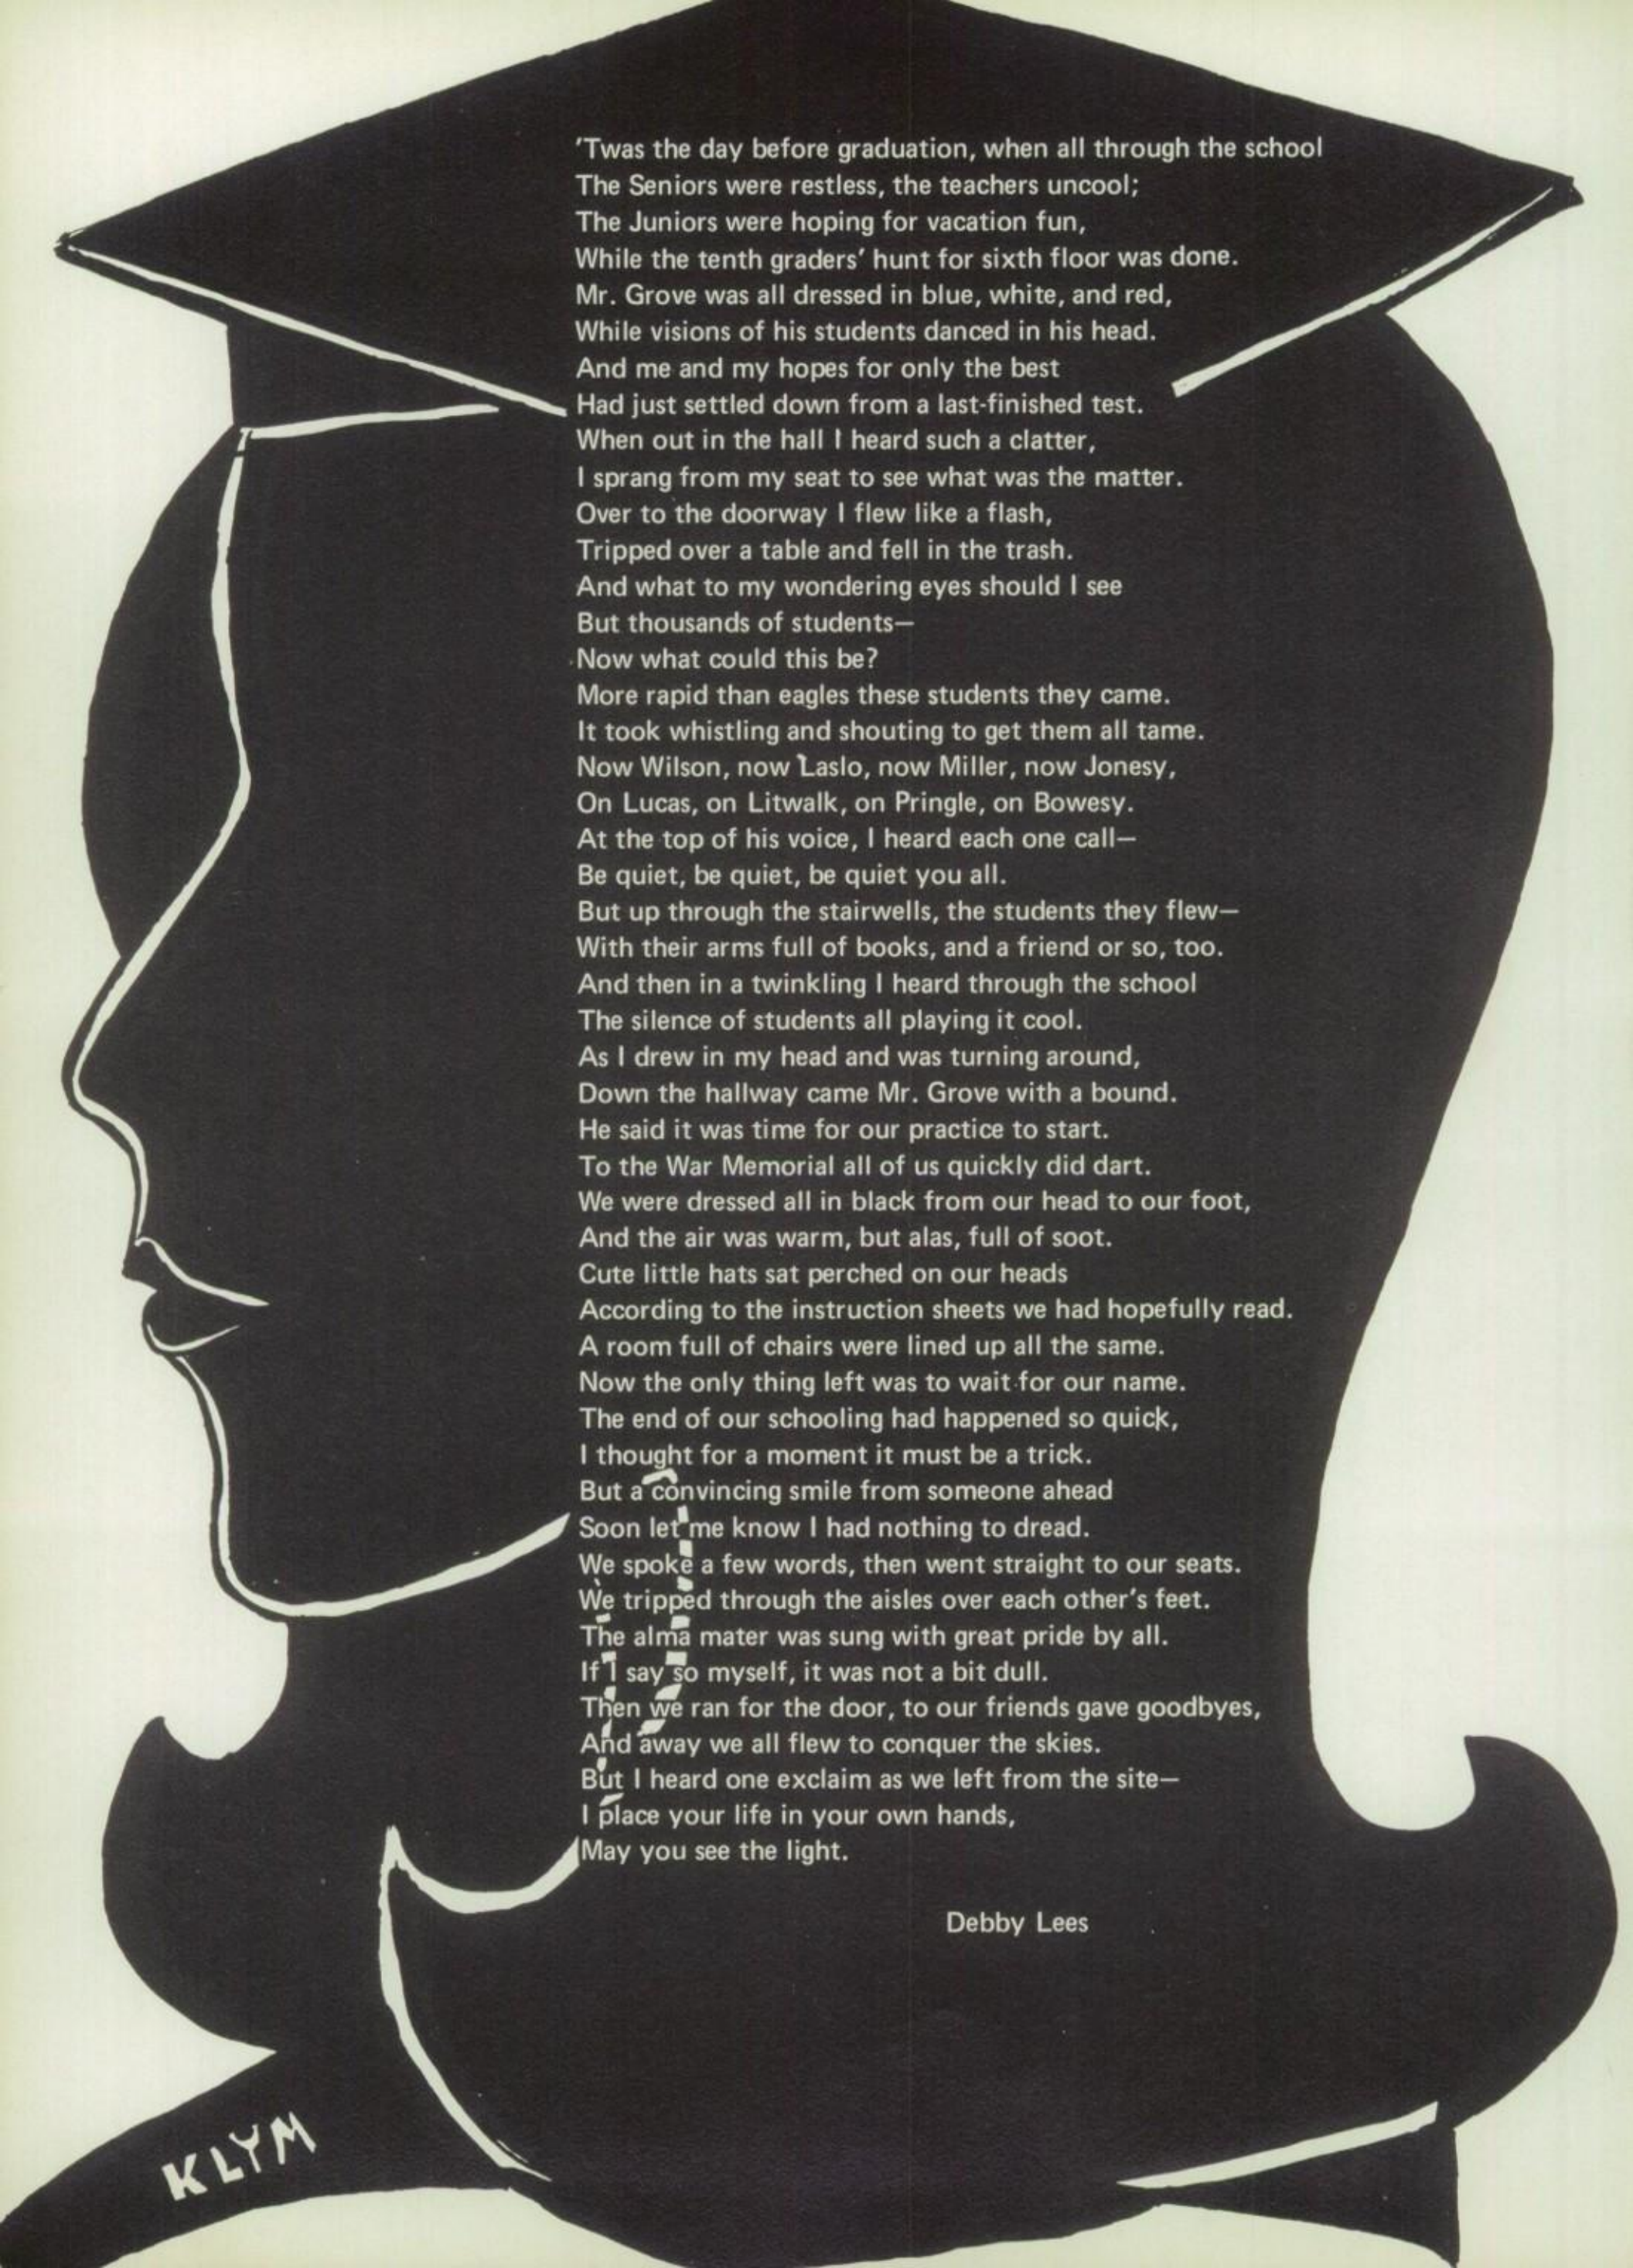

'Twas the day before graduation, when all through the school
The Seniors were restless, the teachers uncool;
The Juniors were hoping for vacation fun,
While the tenth graders' hunt for sixth floor was done.
Mr. Grove was all dressed in blue, white, and red,
While visions of his students danced in his head.
And me and my hopes for only the best
Had just settled down from a last-finished test.
When out in the hall I heard such a clatter,
I sprang from my seat to see what was the matter.
Over to the doorway I flew like a flash,
Tripped over a table and fell in the trash.
And what to my wondering eyes should I see
But thousands of students—
Now what could this be?
More rapid than eagles these students they came.
It took whistling and shouting to get them all tame.
Now Wilson, now Laslo, now Miller, now Jonesy,
On Lucas, on Litwalk, on Pringle, on Bowesy.
At the top of his voice, I heard each one call—
Be quiet, be quiet, be quiet you all.
But up through the stairwells, the students they flew—
With their arms full of books, and a friend or so, too.
And then in a twinkling I heard through the school
The silence of students all playing it cool.
As I drew in my head and was turning around,
Down the hallway came Mr. Grove with a bound.
He said it was time for our practice to start.
To the War Memorial all of us quickly did dart.
We were dressed all in black from our head to our foot,
And the air was warm, but alas, full of soot.
Cute little hats sat perched on our heads
According to the instruction sheets we had hopefully read.
A room full of chairs were lined up all the same.
Now the only thing left was to wait for our name.
The end of our schooling had happened so quick,
I thought for a moment it must be a trick.
But a convincing smile from someone ahead
Soon let me know I had nothing to dread.
We spoke a few words, then went straight to our seats.
We tripped through the aisles over each other's feet.
The alma mater was sung with great pride by all.
If I say so myself, it was not a bit dull.
Then we ran for the door, to our friends gave goodbyes,
And away we all flew to conquer the skies.
But I heard one exclaim as we left from the site—
I place your life in your own hands,
May you see the light.

So now we stand in the entrance-way of all that is to come, and the curtain slowly rises on Act Three — The Future. I believe that, as surely as yesterday is all that we've done, tomorrow can be all that we dream. And now that a fitting tribute has been paid to seventeen full years, I must go about deciding the goals I shall set, what far-off star I shall seek to catch. I must begin to dream.

I have been told countless times of the vital importance of a well-planned future, the overwhelming need for a stable destination. But I have found a determination in dreams that the best-laid plans will lack. Planning and pre-destination in moderation is all well and good. Yet greater still is the fulfillment gained in choosing a path to follow letting time, circumstance, and desire dictate the pace and road-side stops; to perhaps eventually merge with another course just as noble. Let there always be a goal in mind, a purpose for striving, but never be so staid on one road of life that the mind should rust in place. Think freely. A man is limitless. Traveling along one highway, he may be, at the same moment, miles above Everest's peak, or fathoms below the unsteady surface of the sea. The body that is visually you can bury you unless the mind is set free. Therefore, in search of a worthwhile and contented future, be steady, but far-reaching; flow gently, but strong; love wisely, but love.

I want my future to be an all-out attack on life, a conquest in which I am the victor. Breathing and talking and walking aren't enough. I want to live life. And in the end I want to be able to say with as much confidence as the philosopher Socrates, "You cannot bury me. You may bury my body, but you can never bury me." In quest of the goal of immortality, I must go beyond the state of mere existence. A beautiful phrase from a poem I once read now emerges vividly in my mind pulsating my heart with its rhythm, moving me on when I most ache to stand still; "... that which is only living can only die." To achieve immortality, it is necessary to surpass life itself. If I leave a little bit of "me" behind in everything I touch, carving my name not in stone so that it may erode in time, but in some eternal being, like the heart or soul, then I can never die.

In my journey to a life without end there exist responsibilities and duties which are equally ever-lasting; a responsibility first of all to that ideal of freedom which has given my life a true birth. With every step I take from today until the dawn of always, I must try to preserve for the next generation of the earth the blessings of true freedom. At the risk of sounding highly idealistic and unpopularity patriotic, I don't think there is any life more valuable than that which is dedicated to what the Greeks wrote centuries ago: "to tame the savageness of men and make gentle the life of the world."

For all of my life until today, I have been taking; taking knowledge, love, security. Now I find that it is my due turn to give. I only hope that I can give enough, chancing the brand of insolence to be bold enough to question, risking the cap of a fool to be brave enough to challenge. If I could find a prayer ensuring a life of no regrets, I would commit it to memory, for even defeats are a hundred times less painful than one regretted word or deed. Tomorrow is forever elusive; therefore, it is imperative that I remember today all of the virtues I hope to capture. Then, perhaps, I could not regret a moment of my first life. Then, perhaps, I will be freed of the possibility of ever echoing the despairing cry of T. S. Eliot: "That is not what I meant at all. That is not it, at all."

And so I have to take precise care in all that I do, in every phrase that I utter to be sure that I am understood, to make genuinely clear my purpose for existing, my reason for striving to live, and the different forms I take in search of true life. I am not always man in body form. I cannot witness spring without taking the semblance of each tree that is reborn. The miracle of old branches offering new bouquets of buds to the sun each year is so much like the miracle of a man who never stops learning but continues, even through the baggage of old age, offering new ideas to anyone willing to share. Sometimes I become a drop of rain, virtually formless, yet quite individual as I drip from a break in the clouds only to learn humility as the ends of my undefined shape blend into a collected puddle of my peers. My future will be like that, an attempt to experience all life and to understand, as best I can, the workings of nature and people learning to live and love them both. I believe in the basic goodness of man and in the infinite and noble achievements of which he is so capable. And I know that I must try to live this faith, handing down this torch of hopes to the future races of the world. For I also know that, as the late senator Robert F. Kennedy once acknowledged, "Each generation makes its own accounting to its children." So that, I suppose, is another future achievement toward which today's arrow must be pointed, to be able to hand over the world to my children without having to make apologies for its condition.

The magic hat that will enable me to do all of this more closely resembles a tasseled cap, a graduation cap which is indeed magical, for beneath that cap will be bits of knowledge from the great scholars of all lands, of all times. Beneath that tasseled head garb will echo the untold lessons of a thousand lives, the experiences of each new encounter with life. The magic won't be so much in what I will be taught but in what I will succeed in learning and ultimately how I apply knowledge, just as the secret of happiness does not lie in what is kept and hidden away but in that which is shared with others.

All of the great men of the world have been sharers, those who were not willing to let apathy govern the misuse of their lives. The mountains have seen men who have walked as tall because of their expressed need to reach out, to touch and improve the lot of others. There were men like Washington and Lincoln, Jefferson and Franklin, John Kennedy and Martin Luther King. But there have been thousands more Jeffersons and Washingtons and Kings who never made the history books because their greatness was recorded in the hearts of the lives they touched. Whether or not history proclaims his glory, a man can reach the highest peak of excellence, for greatness does not come in degrees. Contrary to what is seemingly true, history does not make heroes. It may instruct mankind as to which heroes he will remember, but each man in reality determines his own status in eternity. His deeds determine whether he will be remembered or forgotten.

I want to be remembered, and so my deeds now must warrant an occasional thought, a fragment of someone's heart and mind. Perhaps the kindness I showed today will be my ticket to immortality. Perhaps the life I touch tomorrow will be the one who will remember long after the ink has dried on the history books of tomorrow. But I cannot take a one-time chance. And so my life must be an infinite chain of great deeds, not necessarily the kind of great that shakes the entire world, but the greatness of the deed that entirely affects one individual; man touching man, leaving behind the imprint of love. With a world such as that, heaven would seem somewhat less heavenly. A Utopia is simply all men striving to be so remembered. There are times, I must admit, when even I am disillusioned with these dreams and lose a little faith in magic. But it is during these times, when dreams seem to exist only to be shattered, that the optimism of Padraic Pearse, A blessed Irish poet, leaps about me, shaking me, waking me up to the reality of dreams coming true. He wrote:

O I have squandered the years that the Lord Gave to my youth in attempting impossible things deeming them alone worth the toil.

The lawyers have sat in council. The men with keen long faces and said, "This man is a fool." Others have said, "He blasphemeth."

O wise men riddle me this; What if the dream came true?

What if the dream came true? That unanswered question will keep me trying, keep me searching, keep me dreaming. As Padraic, a revolutionary of his day, had done countless times, I too will attempt the impossible, "squandering" my years on that one possibility that someday the dream of men living together in peace will come true.

And now, with the knowledge we have sought and found, we take our diplomas in our hands and leave to perform our roles on the many different stages of the world. Some will wear the costumes and carry the props of the trades. Others perhaps will don the masks of scholars, businessmen, and scientists. But the importance is not in the stage on which we perform or the roles that we play. The true value lies in the performance each of us gives, the contributions we make to change for the better the world we leave to our descendents. One pair of hands pushing at a mountain will only become soiled and sore. But multiply that number and imagine the efforts of millions of hands pressuring that mountain to move. A mountain has yet to be made that could withstand the force of such alliance. Please dream with me of that brighter world. Believe in the magic of Padraic's faith, the faith he shared with Franklin, and Lincoln, and Kennedy. And like these man, let us work with fervent lives to master the art of transforming a single dream into a working reality.

Whatever we choose to do, whatever contributions we ultimately offer each other, I sincerely hope we learn to avoid the games of deception that people so often play. The first thing men must share, even before they can share love, is truth. An acceptance of truth is the strongest foundation any generation can lay. Opposing this, lies serve only to confuse associations, divide unions, and break even the strongest of bonds. You may . . . call the sun by another name, it still shines; play musical chairs with the seasons, the flowers still grow in spring; tell me that the earth is flat, we both still know it's round; convince me that there is no God, we both still hope. How foolish we are to try and fool each other, and all we end up doing is confusing ourselves. Let us clear the confusion, drop the charade of hypocrisy. Let us open our lives to truth, and then love and peace and happiness will surely follow.

My future, therefore, lies in truth and dreams and love; education, and sharing and giving, each as important as the other. But I am sometimes slightly apprehensive, even frightened, of not living up to my own expectations. I start to wonder if maybe enthusiasm for changes and thirst for dangers are only a curse of the young. Will injustice still be wrong when I am tired of fighting? Will apathy seem as bad when I have lost the urge to change? Will I let the "better" world I have created stagnate because of stubborn pride in what I have done? There is only one aspect of the future that sometimes troubles me. And it bothers me that I sometimes let it trouble me. The troublesome, bothersome aspect is that the future can only be planned and dreamt. There is no way to insure the future you dream. Where tomorrow is concerned you are stuck in a corner with two choices: either you die in the present only going through false motions of tomorrow, or you take your chances and dream. I suppose I'll continue to dream and pray that that Someone Who insures all things will see to it that my life will not be a disappointment to Him, to the world, and to me.

As my prayer concludes, necessity dictates that I go about the fulfillment of my life. And so, keeping to ritual, I take a quick but loving glance at the past, say a dream and a prayer for the future, and begin taking care of today's moments. I complete accepted responsibilities, wind up dangling promises all the while I am again getting involved, accepting added responsibilities, pledging new promises. But that is what I have chosen to do, spreading and stretching myself until I touch all the faces of life. My path is constantly merging; I am like the river which freshens its waters by absorbing a thousand different tributaries which have flowed through as many different lands, and I am enriched with the mixing of the soils. Life offers a multitude of adventures and experiences which are moving constantly around us. All we need to do is reach out and touch, and we may learn. The only true blind men are those who will not see, those who close their eyes, their minds and their hearts to all that makes the earth as beautiful as it is.

I find now that as the future is assuredly approaching, today is constantly changing, making ready for the crucial decisions of tomorrow, and an eternity of tomorrows. And I realize that although life is comprised of three stages, there is no real beginning or end, no definite transition between young and old. It is suddenly clear to me that all life is really a series of rebirths and no man ever dies; he is only reborn into another place, another time. Therefore, all I can hope for the future is that I may continue sharing and enjoying life with as many beautiful people as I have met along the road of "Growing Up", that each new birth will herald the beginnings of everlasting friendships. I leave old friends now, yet they will always be with me for they are a part of me. I have become the sum total of all the people I have known. I am the peices of all the ways they have touched my life. I was born. I shared a life, and now I am being born again. I'll capture for my memory one last reflected moment and move on.

I was born upon the wind that carried me across the land.
And I witnessed all the seasons and saw the many faces of life.

I lived through rain and snow and thunder.

I felt the sun, the earth, the water and rode the vast stretches of the skies.

I shared my joy with God; He shared his joy with me.
Then I thought it time to go and share my knowledge.

And now after seventeen years, I am born again, and again I am on the wings of the wind. I wonder what new lands, what new faces, what new lives I shall touch this time . . .
